Huguette Labbé Doherty (1942-2008)
En Californie, le 17 mars 2008, à la suite d’une longue maladie, s’éteignait paisiblement, entourée de sa famille, Huguette Pauline Labbé. Elle rejoint ses parents feu Donat et Marie-Rose inhumés au cimetière de l’Assomption, ainsi que son petit-fils Jackson sous d’autres cieux. Huguette est née dans la maison familiale d’autrefois dans le Rang-Saint-Pierre près de Saint-Georges. Outre son époux Richard Doherty, elle laisse dans le deuil ses enfants Kelly (Walter) et Scott (Melissa); ses petits-enfants adorés Finn et Maggie; sa soeur Lilianne (Wayne) et ses frères Yvon (Renée) et Marcel (Judy). Elle laisse également dans le deuil plusieurs cousins, cousines et ami(e)s.

Vos témoignages de sympathies peuvent se traduire par un don sujet à dégrèvements d’impôts, à la mémoire et au nom de Huguette P. Labbé, et envoyé à la fondation de l’Université du Maine, fonds Centre Franco-Américains Huguette P. Labbé Franco-American Centre Fund, One Alumni Place, Orono, ME 04469-5792.

Le Centre Franco-Américain fondé et sous la direction de son frère Yvon, œuvre depuis plus de 30 ans pour faire connaître et faire mettre en valeur l’histoire, l’expérience, et la contribution des dizaines de milliers d’anciens Canadien Français qui sont venus s’établir dans le Maine et ailleurs en Nouvelle Angleterre, tel que la famille Labbé.

La vie de Huguette, cette grande dame courageuse et d’une dignité inébranlables, sera célébrée à St-Georges-de-Beauce cet été.

The history of Franco-Americans has been omitted for generations from the history books due to the politics and discrimination Francos faced in employment and social settings.

The history of Franco-Americans, like Native Americans, has long since been left out of school curriculum so our younger generations are becoming less aware of their roots, their language and their history.

Franco-Americans have a proud ethnic heritage that needs to be preserved.

L’histoire des Franco-Américains a été omise des livres d’histoire depuis plusieurs générations à cause de la politique et la discrimination auquelles les Francos ont fait face dans leur situation d’emploi et leur milieu social.

L’histoire des Franco-Américains, tel que celle des Amérindiens, depuis longtemps sont absentes du curriculum de nos écoles. Il en résulte que nos jeunes deviennent de moins en moins conscient de leurs racines, leur langue et leur histoire.

La mission des Archives orales franco-américaines a deux volets. Dans un premier temps, c’est de développer, de collectionner, d’archiver, et de rendre disponible au grand public une documentation orale se rapportant à l’histoire personnelle, ethnique, politique, et régionale des Franco-Américains. Dans un deuxième temps, et comme histoire publique, c’est de relier l’académie avec la communauté en promouvant les études communautaires et de familles, la préservation historique, l’héritage touristique, la technologie de pointe des médias, ceci afin d’enrichir la compréhension historique de la mémoire collective publique.

Quebec, a City of Superlatives

By Denise R. Larson

Quebec is a small city and the only fortified one in North America. The wall that encloses Quebec is thirty-five feet high and about two miles long. Inside its confines are Upper Town, which includes the Citadel on Cap Diamant and the area north of it; and Lower Town, which lies between the cliffs of Cap Diamant and the Saint Lawrence River.

In Upper Town, the Chateau Frontenac occupies the site of Fort St. Louis, which was built by Samuel de Champlain and his men to protect a trading post that was founded in 1608. The apothecary Louis Hebert built a stone house near the fort. From his home he dispersed medicines to the residents of the post and served in many civil capacities. His wife, Marie Rollet, welcomed orphan Native American children and ran a school for them.

Champlain built his l’Habitation in Lower Town in order to have easy access from the river to the trading post for the hunters who brought in furs and for the ships from France that brought supplies and trading goods to Quebec. The church Notre-Dames-Des-Victoires in the Place Royale stands on the site of the trading post. The courtyard of the square is the former location of Champlain’s garden. The church, built in 1688, is considered the oldest one in Canada.

For more superlatives, the street called Sous-le-Cap is only eight feet, ten inches wide, and is considered the narrowest street in North America, which is not surprising as it is one of the oldest, too. However, the oldest street in Quebec and the oldest commercial street in North America is thought to be Rue du Petit-Champlain, which served as the main thoroughfare during seventeenth-century.

Quebec City is old, and it sits along the Appalachians, the world’s oldest mountains, which have been so worn down by weather and time that they are not much more than rolling hills in most places. Forests cloak them. Hiking trails weave through them. People love them. People love, too, the history and quaintness of old Quebec. We hope that la belle ville will have a very happy 400th anniversary.

Edouard "King" Lacroix
And his impossible Umbazooksus and Eagle Lake Railroad
by Charles Francis

(NDLR: This article first appeared in the Discover Maine, Vol. 5, Issue 1. The photos accompanying this article are used with permission from the Patten Lumbermen’s Museum).

Eagle Lake is one of the most beautiful lakes in Maine, even if its waters are a light shade of tea-brown. The tea-brown color is the result of some 100 years of logging. Over that period giant logs were left behind by various logging companies to sink to the bottom. It is tannic acid from the decomposition of the logs which is the most likely source of the discoloration.

The Eagle Lake region is famous for a number of reasons. In 1846 Henry David Thoreau got this far on his trip to the Allagash. Then, long after Thoreau came here with his Indian guides, some adventurers claim to have seen strange lights in the sky, describing them in ways that even today, die hard UFO- ologists continue to make pilgrimages here in hopes of seeing flying saucers. The region is also famous for the Umbazooksus and Eagle Lake Railroad, the railroad that some said was impossible to build so far into the north woods.

Back in the mid-nineteenth century, Churchill Dam was the hub of lumbering operations in the Allagash region. Today one can still find pieces of steam-driven apparatus and remains of the buildings that once housed the woodsmen and their timber cutting equipment still standing. The dam that exists today is a new one built to control water height on the lower Allagash for purposes of recreational boating and fishing.

In the days before gravel roads honeycombed the north woods, logs were floated downriver to the mills of central Maine from the Churchill Lake region. There was a problem with this, however. Not all the rivers of the region run to central Maine. Some flow to Canada. The first approach to dealing with the problem was a system of canals that were built shortly before the Civil War. The canals were a less-than-successful solution, however. It took a fair amount of time to float logs on the slow-moving canal waters and they were continually getting hung up. Then, around 1900, mechanization stepped in.

The first indication that the north woods was about to enter the twentieth century came with the construction of a tramway between Eagle and Churchill lakes. The 3000-foot-long tramway consisted of a system of steam-driven axles which transported logs from Eagle Lake to Churchill. From Churchill the logs were floated down to the mills of Millinocket. The tramway operated for about six years starting in 1903. It ceased operation when the timber around Eagle Lake was logged out. That appeared to be the end of rail operations for the north woods. At least, it was the end, until an inventive Canadian by the name of Edouard “King” Lacroix appeared on the scene.

Edouard Lacroix was a big-time timber cutter with bases of operation in Quebec and New Brunswick, including Madawaska on the Canadian side of the border. Starting about 1920, King Lacroix began buying up timber rights in the Allagash region. The timber he cut went to central Maine, primarily Millinocket. Lacroix, however, was experiencing the same problems moving his timber to central Maine that had plagued his predecessors. His solution was the Umbazooksus and Eagle Lake Railroad, the railroad that many said could never be built.

Lacroix began building his railroad at Eagle Lake in 1926 not far from the old tramway. (By this time there was a new stand of timber in the Eagle Lake region). The line extended in a westerly direction and went for a distance of thirteen miles down the shore of Chamberlain to the head of Umbazooksus.

Building materials for the Umbazooksus and Eagle Lake were brought in during the winter of 1926-27 using Lombard Log Haulers. The Lombards even brought in the two steam locomotives that were used on the line. The biggest part of the job was the construction of the 1500-foot trestle across the Allagash, which had to be strong enough to support the massive weight of the pulp cars. The trestle was designed by Max C. Hilton, one of the most knowledgeable figures in the history of logging in northwestern Maine.

The Umbazooksus and Eagle Lake had a very short history. Almost immediately after its construction, it was purchased by the Great Northern Paper Company. Under this new ownership, a system of conveyors to assist in the loading operation was added at Eagle Lake, and the name was changed to the Eagle Lake & West Branch Railroad. King Lacroix, however, was kept on to manage it.

During the seasons when the rails were free from ice and snow, the railroad operated twelve hours daily. There were usually ten to twelve cars to a train, each car carrying approximately twelve cords of wood. To facilitate speed there was a double track at the middle of the run so that trains could pass. This meant that an empty train could be returning to Eagle Lake while a full one was making its run to Umbazooksus.

King Lacroix’s “impossible railroad” operated until 1930. The end of the operation came when the Eagle Lake region was again logged off. At that point the locomotives were run into sheds, shut down and abandoned.
Ma Grand-Mère Sirois
And the Value of a Family Genogram

By Annette Paradis King

If I were to give recognition to one person for my interest in writing our family history, it would be mon Grand-Mère Sirois. That’s right, yet a tad odd, for there was no verbal exchange or encouragement that went on between us that might have directed me to write our history. Mon Grand Meme actually didn’t leave behind anything that might have brought the two of us closer to sharing an interest in family history. Something as small as bits of handwriting found tucked here or there, a letter, or even a birthday card with a personal message were nothing but fantasies on my part. Those deficiencies, however, were enough to send me adamantly gathering and documenting events large and small taking place in my own daily life. My grandchildren, when their curiosities begin to stir, will have a family genogram waiting for them.

Ma Grand-Mère

Ma Grand-Mère Sirois remains an endearing woman in my heart. Even now I remember her strength of character and unshaken faith. She was a rigidly formal little woman, worn out for her age, reserved enough to hold back hugs and kisses, carrying a soap and water scent, wearing a crown of gray hair, showing traces of aging with a hunched back, footing unsteady, dark close-set eyes that twinkled regardless, when focused on me. I think also of the many sufferings she endured simply to exist. Sadly, I feared that what I could remember was about all we’ll ever know of her and other women of her generation, my ancestors. She died at the age of fifty-eight and before my seventh birthday. The tragedy of her early death was compounded by the fact that she never had the opportunity to learn to read and write, and even if she had, the time to do so may not have been hers to squander.

In any case, mon Grand Meme wasn’t a story teller so in order to understand what life was like for her, I have relied on other authors’ of the early 20th century to guide me. My maternal and paternal great-grandparents migrated from Quebec to Maine in the mid-eighteen-hundreds. Why these folks came to Maine and how, has been deduced from many years of reading other authors opinions. This has been a rewarding experience that re-kindled an enormous amount of pride. We come from hard working people and possibly that’s enough to comprehend and to give homage.

Other Writers

My life is a comfortable one in comparison to my grandmother, considering she died young. It is a good possibility the lack of any medical treatment shortened her life. The obstacles these poor souls faced for decades are well documented, and I have read stories covering similar situations. The Belles of New England by William Moran, tells how our ancestors came to New England, and includes several stories of dying women young. The fear of speaking up was wide-spread as well as how our people were easily led (or miss-led) by factory owners, their overseers and even the parish priests. It took generations before independence appeared across the board as we know it today.

The idea of independence is also prominent in Carolyn G. Heilbrun’s interesting book, Writing a Woman’s Life. What I found most important from its 128 pages was that a woman must work toward independence early in her life. The facts were loud and clear. If she can support herself, she will have money of her own; if she has money she will have power. By power I mean the ability to do anything she wants, i.e., write, paint, travel, create and eventually even marry a true partner.

It is the dependency on another that discourages dreams from developing. Heilbrun wants the reader to realize. If dreams are lost, she says laughter is, too. A woman not only needs a room of her own, (as Virginia Woolf famously proposed) but a bank account of her own as well, which comes by working hard at what one likes best. The women of my generation were taught to search for and ‘catch’ someone who would take better care of us then our fathers. Heilbrun suggests that a good marriage is formed on intellectual parity.

This book offers the knowledge I never gave much thought to before. I don’t think May Sarton addressed independence the same way nor did Willa Cather or Leo Tolstoy. Independence was among the words they wrote but I gave no thought to independence. Now I know it happens to be the most important ingredient to life long happiness. By the end of Carolyn G. Heilbrun’s interesting book, Writing A Woman’s Life, I was also thinking about the way I grew up.

My generation thought it was necessary to get married young and certainly to a man able to support us. That idea in some cases led to a subservient woman and if he happened to be the wrong man, women stayed married regardless. The reasons are clearly understood retrospectively: young women weren’t taught to think for themselves!

I might have missed something, but I don’t remember my mother or one of my teachers saying, “reach for independence before you decide what vocation or profession you’ll choose.” That might have been a powerful bit of advice!

My Perspective

Through this journey, I have also come to understand that a family ‘history’ can offer a child an identity and a lifelong perception of self—something I came by only with difficulty, and then quite late in life. These stories of ethnic family life have been engaging and enlightening but of course, personal substance is lacking. From researching our history, a great urgency drove me to write down everything I know or remember that has taken place during my life. Consequently, and in a very positive way, my grandmother aimed me in this direction.

For my family, generational silence is at an end! I am very eager to give our newest family members a genogram that will take them beyond names and birth dates. I have high hopes that leaving my collection of observations and a measurable amount of identity will be of lasting value to them. With one hand, I’m holding my grandparents and parents hands while reaching out to my children, grandchildren and future great-grandchildren with the other. My stories are documented to help them feel part of past generations in a human sense. I imagine that my writings are heirlooms, somewhat similar to the patterns and hand-stitches placed by grandmothers who were quilters. These patterns, placed with their hands onto material were their way of preserving their family identity. These heirlooms, for those fortunate enough to have them, are treasures and, surely, comparable in value to the written word.

I hope my grandchildren will appreciate my little stories. They will learn how I feel about lots of things. Today, my thoughts are focusing on the independence of women. Fifty years from now my thoughts may be outdated, but even then they may be interesting to compare with current times.

Modern life from my elderly eyes is seen as a fleeting moment. How quickly things are replaced! Fewer marriages last for fifty years; my adult children move into the next situation as fast at times as each new year is celebrated. I’m guessing youngsters still feel that time beats-out too slowly. But they should know this is the time to form the habit of keeping a journal. The complexities of relationships and human experiences are kept alive if events are written in an articulate manner. Taking the time to map where they began, how far they went, and how it turned out will give their lives meaning beyond those of the birds that fly across the sky without leaving a trace behind.

I’m not sure I’ve put something together that will help some one. But, I’m hopeful just one young one might get thinking on the importance of preserving our history and find the courage continue to do so after me!

About the Author:

Annette P. King grew up on Academy Hill during the Great Depression and graduated the Old Town High School in 1942. At that time, the high school was located on Jefferson Street in Old Town. Annette’s lived on Wilson Street a few streets below the high school. In 1949 she graduated the Robert Breck Brigham Hospital, in Boston, Massachusetts. She married Gerald C. King from Bradley, Maine. He graduated from John Bapts High School and the University of Maine. They raised four sons in Wallingford, Connecticut. Gerald took early retirement. Today Annette and Gerald live on Frenchman Bay, in Gouldsboro, Maine.

She decided to write a story in honor of her father who had encouraged all six of his children to finish high school, a not so common goal for those hard times during and following the Great Depression.

The Book Is About: The author’s French-Canadian-American parents raised six children during the Great Depression, and well beyond World War II. The story—non-fiction—mirrors the pride and independence the children learn from their father. It has everything to do with his Catholic faith and loyalty for his Canadian heritage and being an American.
A Red Superstition

By Virginia Sand

During my youth, I often heard my Franco-American, Amerindian mother tell several paroles that were considered superstition. She had probably heard these paroles from her own mother; paroles like, “When a dog howls, that means that someone will die soon.” I do not recall my father having told paroles of superstition, only my mother. I believe that paroles of superstition were passed down from generation to generation in my family, by oral tradition. But of course, these paroles of superstition did not always come to pass.

Take, for example, if one dropped a knife, a spoon, or a fork on the kitchen floor at my parent’s house, my mother said to expect some company. However, company did not always follow, and if it did, would it be coincidence?

Fear of the unknown can lead to superstitious actions like knocking on wood. In that case, my mother was always knocking on the wood furniture, and it had to be real wood. For example, if my mother was explaining to her friend that she was having a good week, she would knock on the wood table for insuring that her good luck would continue.

Further, my mother hated spiders. She feared them and often killed them. Each time that my mother killed a spider, she said that it would rain. Still, the rain did not always follow, but if it did, would it be coincidence?

My mother was also saying that it was bad luck to pass under a ladder or to open an umbrella in the house. I naturally listened to my mother, so I never opened my umbrella in our house.

Above all, my mother told me to never wear red clothes when I was attending a funeral service, a funeral procession, or a funeral oration. In that case, here is a small story for demonstrating superstition:

A Red Superstition

There once was a thirteen year old girl named Sylvie Delarosbil. Sylvie was always listening to her mother, including her mother’s superstitions. However, at thirteen years old, Sylvie began to test her mother’s superstitions.

One evening after dinner, while Sylvie was watching television, she heard a dog howling in the neighborhood. Afterwards, Sylvie heard her mother’s voice crying out from the kitchen, “Someone will soon die!” Then, Sylvie heard her mother’s voice from his office as usual, “That is just superstition.” In the meantime, while Sylvie’s mother was drying dishes in the kitchen, she dropped a knife on the floor. Then, Sylvie and her father heard the mother’s voice one more time, “We are going to receive some company!” Immediately after, Sylvie heard her father shout, “It’s only another superstition!”

Well, when the parents joined Sylvie in the living room, the mother sat in a wooden rocking chair. While she was rocking in front of the television, she expressed that the week was going very well. Then she knocked on the wooden arm of her chair. Immediately, the father responded, “Let’s see, knocking on wood, it is still another superstition!”

Later, the mother went to the bathroom to take a shower. Suddenly, Sylvie and her father heard a loud scream, with the word “spider.” Apparently, the mother met a spider in the bathroom. Consequently, the mother killed the poor spider and flushed it down the toilet. All of a sudden, Sylvie and her father heard, “It is going to rain since I just killed the spider!” The father again exclaimed, “Look here, it is simply an old superstition!” After that, everyone went to bed.

The next day, when Sylvie and her parents awoke they noticed that it was raining very hard. Moreover, on getting

Une Superstition Rouge

Par Virginie Sand

Pendant ma jeunesse, j’entendais souvent ma mère Franco-américaine, Amérindienne dire plusieurs paroles qui étaient considérées la superstition. Elle avait probablement entendu ces paroles de sa propre mère ; les paroles comme, « Quand un chien hurle, cela veut dire que quelqu’un va mourir bientôt ». Je ne me rappelle pas de mon père avoir dit les paroles de la superstition, seulement ma mère. Je crois que les paroles de la superstition se faisaient circuler de génération en génération dans ma famille, par la tradition orale. Mais bien sûr, ces paroles de la superstition ne venaient pas toujours se passer.

Prendre, par exemple, si on a laissé tomber un couteau, une cuillère, ou une fourchette sur le plancher de la cuisine chez mes parents, ma mère disait d’attendre quelque compagnie. Pourtant, la compagnie ne suivait pas toujours, et si elle l’a fait, serait-il la coïncidence ?

Craindre l’inconnu de pouvoir mener aux actions superstitieuses comme en frappant sur le bois. Alors, ma mère frappait toujours sur les meubles de bois, et il devait être le vrai bois. Par exemple, si ma mère expliquait à son amie qu’elle avait une bonne semaine, elle frapperait sur la table de bois pour assurer que sa bonne chance continuait.

En outre, ma mère détestait les araignées. Elle les craignait et les tuait souvent. Chaque fois que ma mère a tué une araignée, elle disait qu’il pleuvrait. Toutefois, la pluie ne suivait pas toujours, mais si elle l’a fait, serait-il la coïncidence ?

Ma mère disait aussi qu’il était la mauvaise chance de passer sous une échelle ou d’ouvrir un parapluie dans la maison. J’écoutais naturellement ma mère, alors je n’ouvrerais jamais mon parapluie dans notre maison.

Sur tout, ma mère me disait de ne jamais porter les vêtements rouges quand j’assistais à un office des morts, un convoi funèbre, ou une oraison funèbre. Alors, voici un petit compte pour démontrer la superstition :

Une Superstition Rouge

Il y avait une fois une fille de treize ans qui s’appelle Sylvie Delarosbil. Sylvie écoutait toujours sa mère, y compris les superstitions de sa mère. Pourtant, à treize ans, Sylvie commençait à éprouver les superstitions de sa mère.

out of bed Sylvie heard some noise at the door. It seemed like there was some company that had arrived unexpectedly. It was only eight o’clock on Saturday morning. Sylvie heard her mother go to the door. Upon opening the door, the neighbor, old Mrs. Albert, entered the house with an open umbrella. Without hesitation, the mother yelled at Mrs. Albert, “Close your umbrella, or else bad luck will fall upon us!” The father responded, “There is nothing to make a fuss about; it is quite frankly another old superstition!”

Unfortunately, old Mrs. Albert brought them some bad news. Her old husband had died during the night. In such a case, she wanted Sylvie and her parents to come to her house tomorrow evening for a funeral service in honor of her husband. After Mrs. Albert left, Sylvie’s mother cried, “Everything is not always superstition, right?”

The next day, Sylvie and her parents prepared themselves to attend the funeral service at the Albert’s house. The mother told Sylvie, “Never wear the color red at a funeral service!” The father interrupted her in saying, “Let’s therefore see, another superstition?” Henceforth, Sylvie wanted to test these superstitions of her mother. So she decided to wear her new red dress that was very bright.

This evening here, in her red dress, Sylvie arrived at the Albert’s house with her parents, on foot. She looked proud. There was a ladder standing in the yard of the Albert’s house. Sylvie still wanted to test her mother’s superstitions, so she walked under the ladder in wearing her red dress. She was not afraid. Finally, Sylvie approached the staircase in front of the door of the Albert’s house. Suddenly, while she was climbing the stairs, Sylvie tumbled down. She turned the ankle of the left foot. Quickly, her father seized her while she was crying from pain. The parents gently put Sylvie on the ground. Sylvie had apparently sprained the ankle. Suddenly, it began again to rain very hard. There was no umbrella with Sylvie and her parents. The parents carried Sylvie to their house. There were three houses between the Albert’s house and the Delarosbil’s house. Meanwhile, Sylvie and her parents had become very wet by the time they arrived at their house. In that moment there, Sylvie began to turn white in confessing to her mother, “Mother, I now believe your superstitions to be true!” On the other hand, the mother explained to Sylvie, “Even though I knocked on wood, the week turned badly. Knocking on wood does not work, right? What to believe?”

That night-there, in her sleep, Sylvie dreamed that dead Mr. Albert had been buried in a bright red suit. Immediately, she awoke and began to turn white. Then she put forth a strong cry, “This entire day was a nightmare! I hate superstitions!”

(Une Superstition Rouge suite de page 8)

Un soir après le dîner, pendant que Sylvie regardait la télé, elle a entendu un chien hurler dans le quartier. Ensuite, Sylvie a entendu la voix de sa mère crier de la cuisine, « Quelqu’un va mourir bientôt ! » Puis, Sylvie entendait la voix de son père de son bureau comme d’habitude, « Ça, c’est justement la superstition ! » Cependant, pendant que la mère de Sylvie essayait la vaisselle dans la cuisine, elle a laissé tomber un couteau sur le plancher. Ensuite, Sylvie et son père ont entendu la voix de la mère encore une fois, « Nous allons recevoir de la compagnie ! » Aussitôt après, Sylvie a entendu son père crier, « C’est seulement une autre superstition ! »

Eh bien, lorsque les parents ont joint Sylvie dans la salle de séjour, la mère s’est assise dans une chaise à bascule de bois. Pendant qu’elle se bercait devant la télé, elle exprimait que la semaine allait très bien. Puis elle a frappé sur le bras de bois de sa chaise. Tout de suite, le père a répondu, « Voyons, frapper sur le bois, c’est toujours une autre superstition ! »

Plus tard, la mère est allée à la salle de bains pour se doucher. Tout à coup, Sylvie et son père ont entendu un cri éclatant, avec le mot « l’araignée ». En apparence, la mère a rencontré une araignée dans la salle de bains. Par conséquent, la mère a tué la pauvre araignée et a actionné la chasse d’eau en bas de la toilette. Soudain, Sylvie et son père ont entendu, « Il va pleuvoir puisque je viens de tuer l’araignée ! » Le père s’est exclamé encore, « Tiens, c’est simplement une vieille superstition ! » Après ça, tout le monde s’est couché.

Le lendemain, tandis que Sylvie et ses parents se sont réveillés ils ont remarqué qu’il pleuvait très fort. D’ailleurs, au saut du lit Sylvie a entendu du bruit à la porte. Il a semblé comme il y avait de la compagnie qui était arrivée inopinément. C’était seulement huit heures du matin de samedi. Sylvie a entendu sa mère aller à la porte. Sur ouvrir la porte, la voisine, la vieille Madame Albert, entrait dans la maison avec un parapluiue ouvert. Sans hésitation, la mère a crié à Madame Albert, « Fermez votre parapluiue, sinon la mauvaise chance va tomber sur nous ! » Le père a répondu, « Il n’y a pas de quoi se réjouir, c’est tout bonnement une autre vieille superstition ! » Malheureusement, la vieille Madame Albert leur a apportés de la mauvaise nouvelle. Son vieux mari était mort pendant la nuit. Alors, elle voulait que Sylvie et ses parents viennent chez elle demain soir pour un office des morts en honneur de son mari. Après que Madame Albert est partie, la mère de Sylvie a crié, « Toutes les choses ne sont pas toujours les superstitions, n’est-ce pas ? »

Le lendemain, Sylvie et ses parents se sont préparés à assister à l’office chez Albert. La mère disait à Sylvie, « Ne porte jamais la couleur rouge au service des morts ! » Le père l’a interrompue en disant, « Voyons donc, une autre superstition ? » Désormais, Sylvie voulait éprouver ces superstitions de sa mère. Alors, elle a décidé de porter sa nouvelle robe rouge qui était très brillante.

Ce soir-ci, dans sa robe rouge, Sylvie est arrivée Chez Albert avec ses parents, à pied. Elle avait l’air fière. Il y avait une échelle debout dans la cour de chez Albert. Sylvie voulait encore éprouver les superstitions de sa mère, alors elle a marché sous l’échelle en portant sa robe rouge. Elle n’avait pas peur. Enfin, Sylvie s’est approchée de l’escalier devant la porte de chez Albert. Tout à coup, pendant qu’elle montait l’escalier, Sylvie a dégringolé. Elle a tourné la cheville du pied gauche. Rapidement, son père l’a saisie pendant qu’elle criait de douleur. Les parents ont mis doucement Sylvie sur la terre. Sylvie s’était apparentement morte. (Suite page 11)
Our March to Quebec

By Denise R. Larson

Mainers driving to Quebec this spring and summer to enjoy the 400th anniversary celebration of the founding of the city in 1608 might be interested in knowing that there is historical precedence for taking Route 201 from coastal Maine to the St. Lawrence River.

Native Americans traveled a north-south route on foot between the Kennebec and St. Lawrence rivers for fishing, hunting, and to conduct trade among the tribes. Benedict Arnold led a militia along the Indian paths to Quebec City in his attempt to seize it and undermine British forces. Developed into a wagon road during the early nineteenth century, the route became known as the Old Canada Road. A century later, when nearly a half-million Canadians of French and Irish descent traveled south in search for work, many followed the same route, but to them it was known as the Road to the States. They found employment in factories and logging camps. Some of the men came to the States to stay, but the majority were looking for income with which to support their families who stayed in Quebec province. These men walked the route between jobs, taking their earnings home, hoping that things had improved and that they could once again make the family farm profitable. That didn’t often happen. Many men eventually brought their family south, and sometimes entire extended families settled in the same town that offered work in the mills for the women as well as the men.

The drive up Route 201 is long but pleasant. It’s an opportunity to put on favorite CDs, enjoy the scenery, and look forward to rest stops in Waterville, Skowhegan, and Jackman before crossing the border.

For a more informative trip, the organization Kennebec-Chaudiere International Corridor offers a brochure with nearly one hundred points of interest, a map, and contact information. There’s even a CD audio-tour, “Deep Woods and River Roads,” that can be ordered from the Web site www.kennebec-chaudiere.com.

The same road, Route 201, becomes Route 173 on the Canadian side and continues to Levis, which sits just across the St. Lawrence River from Quebec City. Frequent ferries ply the water and the ride is short and smooth.

The terminal is in a convenient location in the old part of the city, and parking lots that offer all-day rates are nearby. For an up-to-date schedule of departures and fees, call 1-877-787-7483. The Web site is www.traversiers.gouv.qc.ca.

Once in Quebec City, the sights, sounds, and special events are sure to delight until we must once again head south and return home, thinking all the while of the many who made the trek before us.

The Canadian Census of 1666

By Denise R. Larson

The census of Canada that was ordered by Intendant Jean Talon and carried out in February and March 1666 was one of the earliest official censuses conducted by Europeans. William the Conqueror had ordered that a count be done of the people of England, their land holdings, and personal belongings. Conducted in 1086, the tally was recorded in the Doomsday Book. The first known citywide census was done in 1449 in Nuremberg, Germany.

Talon’s count included the greater Quebec City area, including Beauport and Isle d’Orleans, and the town and environs of Trois Rivieres and Montreal. The original 154-page document is preserved in the Archives of Paris. A copy is held in the parliamentary Library in Ottawa.

In the 1666 census are 3,215 names of individuals who were dwelling in Canada at the time the tally was taken. The census did not include the 1,000 or so members of the Carignan-Salieres Regiment, which had been sent from France in 1665 to quell the Iroquois. It did include the names of fifty Filles du Roi who had been sent from a French orphanage to find husbands in the new settlements of Canada.

The census was undertaken in late winter so that the census takers could travel by sleigh and snowshoe and avoid the wet months when the route might be impassable. Winter was also a good time to find most of the people at home or closeby and before the supply ships made their voyages from and back to France and changed the composition of the population.

Statistics drawn from the 1666 census show that of the 3,215 persons tallied, 2,034 were males and 1,181 were females. Of those, 1,019 were married, 42 widowed, and 2,154 were children or unmarried adults. Though the majority of the population was young, fifteen residents were between the ages of 71 and 90.
Handicrafts in Canada

by Denise R. Larson

Almost as soon as women arrived in New France, spinning wheels were whipping and shuttles on looms were clacking. Sheep brought from France aboard the same ships as the settlers provided wool for spinning yarn; and flax, grown from seed from the Old World, provided long fibers to make into thread for weaving linen. Weaving, crocheting, and knitting were not only craft and pastime but the only reliable way to provide new clothing and household furnishings for the habitants of Quebec and other fur-trading posts in the New World.

Native Americans shared their knowledge of cleaning and preparing deerskins for use as clothing. They also demonstrated how boxes and food vessels could be made out of the ply able inner bark of the birch tree. When the supply of European embroidery threads had been depleted, the young pupils of the Ursuline Sisters, who ran a school for native children, showed the sisters how to use moose hair and porcupine quills to make designs on boxes and vestments.

A unique piece of adornment was called the “ceinture flechee,” or arrow sash. It was made by the off-loom method called the “ceinture flechee,” or arrow sash. It was made by the off-loom method of finger weaving. The distinctive “V” pattern is worked into a long, narrow sash that was used for ceremonial dress, as straps for equipment that must be carried on long treks, and to belt and tie clothing close to the body for warmth.

The Ursulines did not limit their work to fabrics. They alone were the artisans who applied gold leaf to figurines in Quebec’s churches. Among them were also notched carvers.

Potters worked with the clay from the banks of the St. Lawrence River to make earthenware for domestic use. Fancy patterns were sometimes stamped onto the surface of bowls or cups.

Metal had to be imported from France and worked by tinsmiths to make utensils and kitchen ware, so wood was used whenever possible. Wooden bowls, cups, and platters served as tableware. When a deposit of iron was discovered in 1737, local ironsmiths were able to produce affordable wrought iron pieces such as fences, railings, and weathervanes.

Along with the English after 1763 came the craft of “thrumming,” which is now called rug hooking. It is still popular in the Maritime provinces. The English also spread the popular craft of quilting, an economical way to use fabric scraps and some bunting to produce a warm coverlet.

Handicrafts are still produced in great quantities in Canada, though now many are for ornamentation rather than daily use. The Canadian Handicrafts Guild, now the Canadian Guild of Crafts, was founded to encourage women to revive traditional crafts and to spread knowledge of the craft work that immigrants and refugees brought to Canada, thus enriching the fabric of Canadian culture.

36 carpenters, 32 masons, 30 tailors, 22 sailors, 20 shoemakers, 18 merchants and 7 hatters. An interesting category was that of “gentlemen of means.” There were 15 of those. The population of 3,000 was cared for by 5 surgeons, educated by 3 teachers, supplied with produce by 3 gardeners. Their sweet tooth were satisfied by 5 confectioners, and their floors were made warm by the products of the 3 carpet weavers. Several tradesmen had a monopoly on their craft. There was only one button maker, one brick maker, one sword grinder, one printer, one ship captain, one jeweler, and one wooden shoe maker.

The people of early Canada obviously did not huddle in ramshackle huts, eat dried peas, and fold idle hands. The communities were vibrant, with plenty of building construction and local commerce going on. Nearly a thousand more Filles du Roi would soon join the settlement and about 400 former members of the regiment would stay. Together these young couples would help expand the population of Quebec province. A hundred years and three generations later the population would be about twenty times the size it was in 1666.

An Influential Woman –
My Grandmother,
Evelina Lachance

This is the story of my grandmother, a woman who set a very high standard for the Lachance women who would follow her. Here’s a snapshot of where my grandmother started and how she demonstrated a work ethic and value for hard work. My grandmother, Evelina Leontine Larochelle was born 17 March 1898 in St. Come, Quebec Canada. Her parents were Anatalie Belanger (mother of 19 babies) and Antoine Larochelle. In the winter, her father was a lumberjack in the Maine woods and in the spring would come down the Kennebec River in Maine on the log drive which ended in my hometown in Winslow, Maine. When my great grandfather secured a job in the paper mill in 1902, he moved his family to Winslow. My grandmother, Evelina became a U.S. citizen and voted faithfully.

My grandmother wanted to be able to help her family out and used forged papers saying she was 16 (actually 13) to get a job at the Lockwood Dutchess Cotton Mill. Children employed in the mills were required to enroll in night school. To what grade she completed, I’m not sure.

My grandmother married my grandfather Joseph Lachance 21 May 1917. They had four children Juliette, Jeanette, Raymond and Pearley (my father). They were married at St. Francis de Sales church which is the mother parish for the Winslow-Waterville Catholic Churches. This is where they attended until St. John the Baptist Parish was founded in 1927 with Father John W. Frawley as their first pastor. My grandmother was a very devout Catholic and religion was a very important part of her life. Baptisms, First Communions and Confirmations were significant events in our lives and a time for celebration.

She passed on her faith and values to her children, grandchildren and great grandchildren. My grandmother attended mass daily and twice on Sunday. On Sunday’s she would pray for special intentions with the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament. Her religious devotion left a lasting impact on my life and through her devotion my life has been very blessed.

When my grandparents were first married they lived in an apartment and then started to buy the land where my parents now live. Each lot was 50 by 100 feet and cost approximately $100 to $150.00 each. Back then, you could pay by the month at the rate of .50 cents to a dollar. Originally they used the land to plant large vegetable gardens. They would turn the harvest into hundreds of canning jars filled with vegetables for winter use.

After my grandparents built a crude greenhouse and moved in (even before the windows were in), they decided to build a greenhouse to grow seedlings to sell. Originally what would become a grocery store was built to sell the plants they grew in their greenhouse. After my father was born in 1935, they decided to turn it to a grocery store run by my grandmother while my grandfather continued to work at the paper mill. My grandfather worked in the shipping department. At that time everything was handled by hand, no forklifts back then, so when his health caused him to give up his job, there was no disability program back then.

So together my grandmother and grandfather formed a partnership to run the store, the greenhouse and drive a school bus for the Winslow School Dept. My grandmother did all the bookwork and finances. Every time they decided to expand their business ventures my grandfather would ask, “Do we have the money?” and she would answer, “yes”. My grandfather never concerned himself with finances, because my grandmother was such a good businesswoman. Their later ventures included building apartment buildings themselves. My grandmother work right along side the men and would work until three o’clock in the morning doing the dry wall and painting. The next morning, she was up making my grandfather breakfast and ready to open the store at six o’clock.

Their grocery store was where people gathered to get the local news and to share stories, jokes and a little refreshment. During World War II, when the young servicemen returned home from basic training, they would come to the store and say hello to Joe and Evelina. She would take out her box camera which she bought at the age of 16 and take their picture on the front lawn. On the front lawn fashioned in red geraniums was a big V…_, Morse code for the word victory. They always had a giant flagpole with an American flag and it was my dad’s job to take the flag down every evening at sundown.

As children she opened up a savings account for each of us and a special account called a “Christmas account” that she would put money in each week so we would have money set aside for Christmas. She encouraged us to save our babysitting money and whatever money we earned from our part-time jobs. By the time it was time to go to college each of us had saved a significant amount of money to get started on our education.

I was staying with my grandmother when I decided to join the Air Force. I still remember that day I left for Basic Training. 17 Feb 1976. We had just received a foot and a half of snow the night before and the roads hadn’t been cleared by the time I needed to leave to catch the Greyhound bus to Portland, Maine. My grandmother was in her late seventies by this time but she was still a very safe driver. That particular morning she decided to call a cab because she wanted to make sure I made it to the bus station on time. She was always a very punctual person and didn’t want me to be late.

That was 32 years ago and it feels like only yesterday. I can still see her waving from her porch and saying “You’ll do well and you will make us proud”, as I got into the taxi cab.

Lachance arrives for duty

Department of the Air Force Civilian Evelyn J. Lachance has arrived for duty in Southwest Asia in the Persian Gulf region to support the mission of Operation Enduring Freedom as a member of the 379th Air Expeditionary Wing.

Wing members provide support for the U.S. Central Command’s Air Forces mission, assisting in the full spectrum of fueling and aerial refueling operations to U.S. and coalition aircraft engaged in the war on terrorism in the region.

Lachance is a communications plans flight commander with 32 years of federal government service.

She is the daughter of Pearley and Alice Lachance of Halifax St., Winslow.

In 1974, Lachance graduated from Mount Merici Academy, Waterville, and received a master's degree in 1995 from Central Michigan University, Dayton, Ohio.
“Franco-American Day at the State House”

Wednesday, March 19, 2007, was the seventh annual Franco-American Day at the State House, a day to celebrate French heritage in Maine during the International Francophone Week. Also a day to honor the Franco-American Hall of Fame recipients.

Inductees this year were author and historian Julie Daigle Albert of Madawaska, museum director Rachel Desgrosseilliers of Minot and promoters of French culture Pearley and Alice LaChance of Waterville.

Also, a posthumous award was given to Professor Madeline Giguere, who established Franco-American Studies as a legitimate part of college curriculum at the University of Southern Maine.

Pearley & Alice Lachance were inducted into the Franco-American Hall of Fame.

severin beliveau receives french legion of honor

Roving Reporter at Legion of Honor Ceremony for Beliveau in Augusta, ME

By JULIANA L’HEUREUX May 22, 2008

Severin Beliveau speaks at the Legion of Honor ceremonies at the State House Hall of Flags last week.

Severin Beliveau’s humble French ancestors arrived in Canada 12 generations ago. They made the arduous journey in the mid-17th century to settle the country mapped by French explorer Samuel de Champlain, who founded Quebec City in 1608.

Those adventurous French pioneers could not foresee how one of their descendents would eventually be recognized as an advocate for their culture, and subsequently become successful enough to receive their country’s highest award. This is especially ironic given the low esteem in which Franco-American descendents had been held in the past.

The Legion of Honor, created in 1802 by Napolean Bonapart, distinguishes people who bring honor to France and promote French culture. It was presented to Beliveau, a Maine lawyer, last week in Augusta by French Ambassador to the United States Pierre Vimont. Governor John Baldacci hosted the ceremony in the State House Hall of Flags.

Franco-Americans continue to connect with their French heritage, despite many years of adversity, said Vimont. In fact, Maine’s Franco-Americans overcame the stigma of ethnic and religious discrimination to achieve economic stability, while remembering their rich traditions.

Nevertheless, many of today’s Franco-Americans are less aware than previous generations of their pioneering French ancestry. Rather, they are assimilated into the American culture. “We need to be proud of our history,” said Beliveau, during his acceptance remarks. “It’s important to teach our children about our French heritage because we are part of American history,” he said. “North Americans today might be speaking French as our primary language, rather than English, if France won the French and Indian War conflicts,” he said. “This long history is something for us to think about.”

French language, culture, and history were in the limelight at the State House when Vimont presented Beliveau with the Legion of Honor.

Children from L’Ecole Francaise du Maine, a French immersion school in Freeport, sang the American national anthem in English. They followed by singing “La Marseilles,” the French national anthem written in 1792, in French.

Several generations of Beliveau’s

friends, family and well-wishers gathered to celebrate with Franco-Americans who attended by invitation from the governor. Beliveau was joined by his wife, Cynthia, and their four sons during ceremonies conducted from a podium situated between an American and a French flag.

Baldacci congratulated Beliveau as an accomplished Maine lawyer and former state legislator who supports Maine’s French heritage and culture. In 2004, Beliveau helped the governor lead a trade mission to France which successfully brought economic and cultural business into Maine, said Vimont.

“This is a wonderful occasion to recognize Maine’s Franco-Americans who make up 25 percent of our state’s population,” Baldacci said.

Rep. Paulette Beaudoin, D-Biddeford, spoke about her Franco-American heritage. She was born in Biddeford and speaks French. “This is a day for us to be proud of our heritage,” she said.

Norman Beaupre, a Biddeford native, French-language writer and professor emeritus said the prestigious award is deserved recognition for Beliveau’s 16 years of good work serving as the French Honorary Consul in Maine. “He deserves this important recognition,” said Beaupre.

Beliveau’s speech reflected on his family’s French Canadian and Acadian heritage. His father was the son of Quebec immigrants who settled in Lewiston and Rumford.

“Indeed, all French-Canadians and Franco-Americans are recognized by the presentation of this esteemed award from the French government,” he said.

Le KKK Au Maine Selon Dr. Mark Richard

par Nicole Ouellette, Ellsworth

Le premier fois que j’ai rencontré Dr. Mark Richard était à un dîner pour Dr. Fried, un professeur en visite de l’Université de Strasbourg en France, qui est en train de créer un projet de « développement durable » avec le Centre Franco-américain à Orono. Il y avait une dîner pour M. Fried avec des membres de la communauté, les professeurs et étudiants de UMFK, et autres personnes intéressées. M. Richard a parlé de sa thèse de matrié à l’Université du Maine à propos des Franco-Américains en Lewiston et j’ai su qu’il était un homme très intéressant. À l’époque de cette interview, il faisait sa recherche sur le Klu Klux Klan au Maine et plus spécifiquement, dans la Vallée Saint-Jean.

Comment est-ce que vous avez choisi l’histoire des Franco-américains comme étude?

Quelles sont des qualités des Franco-Américains comme groupe? Comment est-ce que on peut les comparer aux autres groupes des immigrants?

Ils sont fiertés dans leur travail mais pas tout a fait dans leur langue et leur culture. Ils ont aussi un sens d’humeur, ils aiment beaucoup taquiner des autres. Ils ont aussi une joie de vivre : une appréciation de bon nourriture, musique, danse et des autres choses qui rende la vie plus riche.

Comme vous savez, il y avait beaucoup de discrimination contre les Français, la plupart qui était catholique et qui n’a pas parlé anglais et les Anglais, la plupart qui était protestant et qui n’a pas parlé français. Le KKK et les Franco-Américains

Le KKK Au Maine Selon Dr. Mark Richard

Je pense que la plupart des gens ne connaissent pas qu’on a eu le KKK au Maine. Pouvez-vous raconter ou, quand, et pourquoi le KKK a survécu au Maine?

Dans les années 20, le Washington Post a vérifié qu’il y avait 150,000 membres du Klan partout. À même moment, il y avait 150,000 catholiques au Maine. Il faut vérifier mais il me semble que le KKK était présent proche des centres Franco-Américains. Par exemple, Lewiston, une ville francophone avait Auburn à coté. Les WASPs (« White Anglo-Saxton Protestants » qui étaient des fois membres du KKK) ont habité à Auburn et ont étudié à Bates et Bowdoin. La plus grande assemblée du KKK n’était pas au Mississippi ou Alabama mais en Milo, Maine! Dans la Vallée Saint-Jean, il y a des rumeurs qu’il y avait une croix allumée (un signe de victoire du Klan) à Madawaska dans les années 20 ou 30. Plus certainement, il y a un portrait du Klan dans un défilé à New Sweden dans les années 20.

Pensez-vous que ce groupe a beaucoup changé les attitudes vers les français au Maine?

Les lois contre l’enseignement de français a été passé en 1919. Le Klan, qui était contre les minorités ethniques en général, avait des hautes positions en public. Par exemple, la plupart des patrons étaient les membres du Klan. Ce contrôle public (mais pas paroissial) a accéléré l’attitude contre les Français et après discrimination contre les Français.

C’est intéressant parce que même aujourd’hui, on peut voir chez le Congrès et le Sénat cette manque de représentation : seulement une quinzaine de 151 membres dans le Congrès et trois au Sénat cette manque de représentation. Il n’y avait pas de représentation des Franco-Américains dans le Congrès et le Sénat. Même aujourd’hui, il y a une réunion des raquetteurs francophones de partout en Lewiston chaque année.

GOLDEN THREADS

I admire the elegance and sophistication of modern décor, chrome lamps, glass tables, suede couches, big splashy oils, but if Aladdin’s lamp were mine to rub, I would wish for the warmth of a room full of antiques: early American furniture; soft sofa and armchairs upholstered in muted velvet; curtains made of ecru embroidered linen; glowing parquet floor covered with an old Oriental rug; brass floor lamps and Chinese peachblow table lamps highlighting the ornamental pieces, my children’s pictures in their silver frames, the paintings on the walls, and the large embroidery above the couch. And to cap it all, there, in the corner near the window, a tall ficus tree potted in a heavy bronze jardinière.

I have dreamed of this room since I was old enough to care about such things, and I have always known that I would feel gladdened every time I entered it. But why do I feel this way? Why do I envy those who live surrounded by family heirlooms centuries old, who can trace their ancestry for generations? At times, I wonder if it is the affluence they convey that appeals to me; I am sure, though, that the answer lies in the rootlessness that has kept my family from accumulating the chattel that creates continuity with one’s past.

My parents couldn’t carry much beyond their clothes when they migrated in the early 1920’s from Turkey to Nice, France, where I was born. During WWII, the Germans played rapine with our belongings. After the war, we migrated to America, again taking with us just what my mother considered worth packing: our clothes, some embroidered linens, and the photo albums that help me recall the friends of my adolescence. On reflection, I am surprised she allowed me that. Of course, I know we couldn’t take my cherished Biedermier secretary with those fascinating cubbies, shelves to hold my books, drop-down work space, drawers for my clothes. But I do miss that heavy silvered cast iron kettle, holding untidy heirloom roses of the palest pink and yellow, that cheered me so during the long weeks I lay with typhoid fever. I miss the candy dish, a matte cobalt blue glass bowl nestled in an art nouveau pewter basket that my mother filled with chocolates from the town’s poshest confiserie to offer our guests. No, there are no rooms to warm me with the patina of memories. I remember only the great silence of my parents who never volunteered details about their own pasts and, sadly, I lacked the wisdom to anticipate how much this void would trouble me one day.

I met a New Mexican last year whose family tree stretches back into the early seventeenth century on both sides of his family. I can’t imagine a family tree showing four hundred years worth of relatives; how could it all fit on a single sheet of paper? How large a piece? I can’t imagine seeing my first name repeated through generations: the Sephardic tradition calls for the first girls and first boys to be named after their four grandparents in a strict order: first the father’s parents, then the mother’s parents. Thus, my father and his sister each have a Lina and a René. I can’t imagine studying the relationships among various cousins, close or distant, and getting a flash of understanding: oh, that’s my great-great-aunt, not hers; or discovering there had been a whole side of my father’s family no one ever talked about, wondering what scandal they might be hiding from me. An embezzler? A cousin involved in an illicit love affair? An unwed mother who had brought shame to the family?

What do I know? I know that both my parents were born in Edirne, a historical Turkish city located four miles from the Greek border and twelve miles from the Bulgarian one, creating a confluence of three distinct cultures. I know that my maternal grandfather was named Nissim and that he died when my father was two years old, but not how. I know my paternal grandmother’s name was Luna Mitrani. I know my name is a gallicized version of hers. I know that my maternal grandfather’s name was Chapat Aaron Behar and that he dealt in woolen yard goods. I know my maternal grandmother was an elegant woman who ran a formal household and prepared elaborate Friday night dinners that used ingredients my grandfather would pick up on Thursday afternoons. Her name was Virginie Canetti, and she was a distant cousin of Elias Canetti, the winner of the 1981 Nobel Prize in Literature, a factoid I sometimes bring up to create interest at parties. I regret not knowing more about my mother’s brother, Nisso, because his story sounds intriguing: a journalist who angered the Turkish government with his outspokenness. Had his articles condemned the genocide of the Armenians? There is no one left in my family to confirm the facts. I know he fled to Bulgaria, followed by his parents and unmarried sisters. Ah, yes, one more thing: when my two-year old mother played in the big garden behind the house – the one with the wisteria arbor and the many rose bushes – she was almost carried off by an eagle that hooked its talons into the big bow at her back. What else do I know? It’s frustrating: I have been racking my brain for years to find more nuggets and have come up empty every time. Did I really not learn anything else? Or have I simply forgotten?

Two photographs reveal the faces of relatives, some of whom I hardly knew. One shows my mother as one of six students at Teachers College in Paris. They are wearing somber dresses of a dark fabric – is that what they called bombazine? – with wide white collars. Large black “butterfly” bows hold their hair back at the nape. Decades later, I met one her friends in New York, but I couldn’t recognize her in the picture. They are posed around three sides of a long table, four seated and two standing, apparently listening to their teacher seated at the other end as he reads from a large textbook. The man, only slightly older than they are, is also dressed in sober black, with a crisply contrasting white shirt and a handkerchief peaking from his breast pocket. My mother is the prettiest. Her face has no sharp angles and does not foretell the black looks she would shoot later whenever she was angry with me.

The other photo is a studio group portrait of my mother’s family in a composition of symmetrical precision. My grandparents are seated a few feet (Continued on page 19)
apart: he is solidly built, with smooth white hair and a compact gray mustache below a nose that is just a smidgen wider than average; she is slender and appears taller than he, a regal presence. A thick three-inch fringe hangs from the armrest beneath his left hand and, between his legs, one gets a glimpse of more fringe trimming the seat. Why do I notice the discrepancy between his elaborate chair and her plain wooden one? Between them stands their youngest daughter, eight-year old Suzanne, holding a hoop. On the left side, with her hand on her mother’s shoulder, stands twelve-year old Anna while the next older girl, Gentille, is holding her father’s shoulder on the right. Behind Suzanne, my uncle Nisso, the oldest sibling, looking exactly like his father down to the mustache, forms the apex of the arrangement, with my mother, Colomba, on his left and her older sister, Dora, on his right. Since this is a sepia shot, it is impossible to tell the colors of the dresses, but I think they are made of silk in mid-tones. Again, the two older girls wear the large butterfly bows that must have been the fashion at the time, while the other three sport white ribbon concoctions on the top of their heads. The girls look very different and, yet, whenever I saw the three sisters together – Colomba, Anna, and Suzanne – at family dinners in New York, I would teasingly call them “three peas in a pod”: it may be they developed like his father down to the mustache, forms the apex of the arrangement, with my mother, Colomba, on his left and her older sister, Dora, on his right. François Bélanger et Marie Guyon à Beauport (1634-1641)

Giffard a-t-il concédé une terre à François Bélanger?

Juridiquement, Giffard, malgré les exhortations du gouverneur Montmagny, n’a concédé en roture qu’une seule terre avant 1644, soit celle à Noël Langlois le 29 juin 1637, lui octroyant 300 arpents. Il est certain qu’il en a concédé verbalement à quelques-uns avant de les céder officiellement1. L’a-t-il fait pour François Bélanger et pour les six «autres déserteurs» de Beauport pour la seigneurie de Beauport dont les noms sont mentionnés sur la carte de Bourdon de 1641. Jean et Simon Guyon, Zacharie et Jean Cloutier, Robert Drouin et François Bélanger n’ont pas attendu la solution définitive de la crise du foin à Beauport en 1647 pour changer de seigneurie et cela malgré les promesses verbales de Giffard2. Dès le début de la crise en 1640, «certains serviteurs» de Giffard ont rêvé des prés communs attribués à Pierre Gagnon dans son contrat de concession par la Cie de Beauport. Cette innovation d’importance causait dans la seigneurie de Beauport où les prés étaient forts pauvres et appartenaient à Giffard une perturbation telle qu’il fut menacé de perdre bon nombre de ses censitaires dans la force de l’âge. Il tenta un effort désespéré pour enrayer la débandade. Il passa le 15 mai 1642, à l’exception des prairies depuis la rivière Du Buisson jusqu’à la rivière de Beauport, un bail à pâturage de trois ans avec Jean Guyon père, Zacharie Cloutier père, Noël Langlois, Jean Côté, Martin Grouvel et James Bourguignon3. Également, comme nous l’avons mentionné, Giffard retardait à concéder des terres. Mais sous la pression de la crise du foin, il commença vers 1644 à officialiser les terres promises depuis longtemps (Grouvel : 1644; Bourguignon et Côté : 1645).

Les terres concédées à Beauport par François Bélanger furent des portions données à son épouse Marie Guyon par son père Jean qui lui octroya, en cadeau de noces, «la jouissance de deux arpent de terre en labour seize au dict beauport». Ceci est confirmé dans le contrat de mariage de Jean Guyon fils et d’Élisabeth Couillard du 27 novembre 1645 qui reçoit lui aussi autant d’arpents «faisant le reste d’une pièce de terre de laquelle François Bélanger a eu deux arpent…». Les deux enfants Marie et Jean pourront en jouir pour la culture jusqu’au décès de leur père4.

François Bélanger et Marie Guyon ont aussi possédé, de 1663 à 1689, une autre portion de six perches 13 pieds neuf pouces par la profondeur du fief du Du Buisson. Dès le règlement final et à l’amiable de la succession de Jean Guyon le 19 octobre 1668 devant Maître Vachon, ils en héritèrent. À Jean, l’aîné des garçons qui avait contesté plusieurs fois le testament de son père en raison de son droit d’aimés lésé, fut octroyée, sans tirage au sort, «la portion numéro un qui joignait les terres du bourg de Furgy ainsi qu’un arpent et demi de terre, sur lequel étaient situés la maison, les bâtiments, la basse-cour et le jardin». Les sept autres portions, tirées au sort cette fois par une «petite fille âgée de six ans environ» furent attribuées, d’ouest en est et dans l’ordre suivant, à Michel, Denis, Simon, Marie (François Bélanger), François, Claude et Barbe (Pierre Paradis)5. Ultérieurement, le 21 mars 1869, Marie Guyon, par l’intermédiaire de son fils aîné Charles (Suite page 21)

Did Giffard grant a farm to François Bélanger?

Legally, Giffard, in spite of the exhortations by Governor Montmagny, did not concede any land in tenant farms except one before 1644. This one to Noël Langlois on 29 June 1637, surveyed out to be 300 acres. It is certain that he parceled some out verbally before he actually did so legally.1 Did he do it for François Bélanger and the six other deserters of Beauport for the Seigneurie of Beauport whose names are inscribed on the Bourdon map of 1641? Jean & Simon Guyon, Zacharie & Jean Cloutier, Robert Drouin and François Belanger did not wait for a solution to the hay crisis of Beauport in 1647 to relocate their farming activities to a different Seigneurie regardless of the verbal promises from Giffard.2 Since the beginning of the hay crisis of 1640, several servants of Giffard had dreamt of communal lands as a result of the wording in Pierre Gagnon’s contract regarding land concessions with the Company of Beauport. This important innovative idea caused a big problem in the Seigneurie of Beauport where the pasture was rare and further more belonged to Giffard. This perturbation was such that Giffard feared the loss of many of his “censitaires”, young and in very good health. As a result, Giffard made a desperate effort to avoid their abandonment of the Seigneurie.

On 15 May 1642, an agreement was made which allowed the prairies from the Du Buisson River to the Beauport River, to be used as pasturage for a three year period. This agreement was originated by Jean Guyon the father, Zacharie Cloutier the father, Noël Langlois, Jean Cote, Martin Grouvel and James Bourguignon.3 Accordingly, as we have mentioned, Giffard held back in granting additional concessions of land. But, under the pressure resulting from the hay crisis, about 1644 he ratified the farms promised a long time before (Grouvel: 1644; Bourguignon and Cote: 1645).

The lands owned by François Belanger at Beauport were portions of land given to his wife Marie Guyon by her father Jean who had carved them out as a wedding gift. “la jouissance de deux arpent de terre en labour seiz audict beauport” (the giving of two acres of land in cultivation at the said Beauport). This is confirmed in the marriage con-à qui elle avait donné une procuration en date du 21 décembre 1688, vendait devant Maître Rageot sa part de « six et demie à sept perches de front » à son frère François marié à Marie-Madeleine Marsollet. La somme de 380 livres tournois, selon ce même contrat, serait remise à Charles Aubert de Lachenayes à titre de constitution de rente par Marie Guyon dont la quittance ne sera réglée réellement que le 24 décembre 1715 entre les héritiers de Charles Aubert et de François Guyon. Celui-ci devenait progressivement propriétaire des parts des autres co-héritiers de telle sorte qu’en 1696, il possédait les 7/8 du fief Du Buisson.

Qui sont les moissonneurs de 1635 et de 1636?

Une autre question se pose pour savoir si François Bélanger faisait partie des sept moissonneurs de 1635 et de 1636 dont parle le Père dans sa Relation.

Le sieur Giffard, qui n’a défriché que durant deux ans, et encore faisant plusieurs souches, espère recueillir cette année, si son bled correspond à celui qu’il monstre maintenant, pour nourrir vingt personnes; dès l’an passé, il recueillit huit poinçons de fourment, deux poinçons de pois, trois poinçons de bled d’inde; et tout cela au moyen des sept hommes qui ont encore été bien divertis à bastir, à faire des foins, et à d’autres manufactures…. (Relations des Jésuites, 1636). Un poinçon équivaut à 320 litres.

tract of Jean Guyon the son and Elisabeth Couillard on 27 November 1645 when they received an equal amount “comprising the remainder of a tract of land where François Belanger already received two acres”. The two children, Marie and Jean, can enjoy the land for farming until the death of their father. François Belanger and Marie Guyon also owned, from 1663 to 1689, another portion of 6 rods 13 feet 9 inches in width in the fief Du Buisson. At the execution of the final will and testament of Jean Guyon 19 October 1668 before Mayor Vachon, they inherited it. To Jean, the oldest of the boys who had disputed on several occasions the will of his father because he felt he should be the sole inheritor due to his first born status, was left a parcel without an exact description, “that portion number one which joins the farms of the Bourg de Fargy and an acre and a half of land on which is located the house, the buildings, the lower yard and the garden”. The seven other parcels drawn lots by a “young girl aged about six years” were allocated as follows, from West to East in the following order: Michel, Denis, Simon, Marie (François Belanger), François, Claude and Barbe (Pierre Paradis). Ultimately, on 21 March 1689, Marie Guyon, represented by her oldest son Charles to whom she had given power of attorney on 21 December 1688, sold her portion (before Mayor Rageot) consisting of “six and a half to seven rods of frontage” to her brother François married to Marie Madeleine Marsolle. The sum of 380 pounds (tournois value) in the same contract, was given to Charles Aubert de Lachenayes to prepay rent for Marie Guyon although the sum was not actually received until 24 December 1715 by the heirs of Charles Aubert and of François Guyon. This last progressively became owner of the other portions of land of the other heirs until in 1696 he owned 7/8 of the fief Du Buisson.

Who are the harvesters of 1635 and of 1636?

Another question asks if François Belanger was one of the seven harvesters of 1635 and 1636 mentioned in Father in his Relation.
Sitcha Deported to the Cameroon
By Albert J. Marceau
Newington, CT

On Jan. 23, 2008, Richard Sitcha was deported to his native Cameroon after four years, four months, and five days of detention by the Dept. of Homeland Security (DHS), without a formal charge of committing a crime. Sitcha was a refugee from the Cameroon due to his role in aiding the families of nine people who were killed by the Douala Operational Command, one of whom was accused for stealing a gas can. Sitcha came to the U.S. in April 2001, after he fled the Cameroon, and in January 2003, he was granted refugee status by the Federal Court in Hartford, Conn. On Sept. 18, 2003, his refugee status was revoked because of a re-investigation by DHS concerning his character witnesses in the Cameroon. The evidence given by DHS was not cross-examined by Sitcha’s lawyer at the time, and the Sitcha was arrested in court. Sitcha continually claimed that his life was in danger if he were returned to the Cameroon.

Sitcha was protected from deportation by a Stay of Deportation from the Summer of 2004 until Dec. 10, 2007, which was maintained by the series of filings for the Writ of Habeas Corpus, which began in the Spring of 2004. On April 25, 2007, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals remanded Sitcha’s Writ to the Bureau of Immigration Appeals (BIA). On Sept. 28, 2007, the BIA upheld the decision of the Immigration Judge at the Federal Court in Hartford who revoked asylum from Richard Sitcha on Sept. 18, 2003. The BIA simply reviewed the procedure of the paperwork involved in the case, and it decided that Sitcha’s claims for asylum did not fulfill the requirements for protection under Federal Law as defined by the Immigration Act of 1965 and the United Nations Convention against Torture. In contrast, a reporter for the Valley Advocate in Northampton, Mass., Maureen Turner, reported on July 22, 2004 in her article, “No Safe Haven,” that she could see physical evidence of torture on Sitcha’s body, in particular, deep scars on the soles of his feet. The scars are evidence of a practice of torture commonly used by the police in the Cameroon, called “bastinade,” in which the soles of the feet of the victim are beaten with the flat of a machete. Unfortunately, the BIA did not examine any physical evidence of torture on Sitcha’s body.

After the BIA made its decision, Sitcha’s attorney, Kevin Hoffkins, assumed that he had 60 days to make an appeal. On Mon. Nov. 19, 2007, he sent all the necessary paperwork to Sitcha by mail, which had to be signed by Sitcha, and in turn, Sitcha had to send the paperwork back to Att. Hoffman, who in turn sent it to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in New York City. However, the deadline for the appeal was 30 days after the BIA made its decision, and the court did not recognize the appeal. Sitcha lost his Stay of Deportation on Dec. 10, 2007, which meant that he was

Marcel Roy, Member, Director and Past President of FCGSC, Is Remembered
By Albert J. Marceau, Newington, CT

Marcel Julian Roy, a member, a long-time director and a past President of the French-Canadian Genealogical Society of Connecticut, died on Easter Thursday, March 27, 2008, after struggling to survive cancer of the kidneys. He was born on July 17, 1932, and he was 75 years, and eight months old when he died. Before his retirement, he worked as an electronics technician and inspector at the Dynamics Control Corporation in South Windsor, Conn., and he earned a certificate from the Ward College of Technology in 1958, according to the University of Hartford Alumni Directory, 1995. He is survived by his wife, Frances, and their daughter, Elisabeth Ashmore of Highland Village, Texas.

Marcel Roy was elected as a Director of the FCGSC on Sat. May 16, 1987, serving from Sept. 1, 1987 to Aug. 31, 1989, and he replaced one of the founders of the society, Marcel Guerard. The report about his election in the Summer 1987 issue of the Connecticut Maple Leaf effectively defined the character of his service to the FCGSC: “Marcel J. Roy (#241), of East Hartford, joined the elected ranks of new Directors. Marcel distinguished himself as a hardworking volunteer during renovations of our new Tolland Research Center. He replaced Marcel Guerard (#3), of Hartford, who regretfully declined to run for re-election…. " Marcel Roy was re-elected as a director for two more terms. He was elected President of the FCGSC on June who inhabited Quebec during the lifetime of the city’s founder, Samuel de Champlain. Companions of Champlain was produced to honor the 400th anniversary of the founding of Quebec City and to enable North Americans on both sides of the border to appreciate more fully their French-Canadian heritage.

Companions of Champlain explains in clear language the reasons for the New-World explorations of Samuel de Champlain in the 1600s and the unique culture that resulted from the establishment of a trading post in the wilds of North America in 1608. It is the story of the habitant family—the farm and daily life—not the complex intrigues of the French king and court, though some historical background information is included. The historical backdrop for Companions of Champlain was drawn from the few extant primary sources of the early 17th century, most particularly Champlain’s Voyages, Marc Lescarbot’s Nova Francia and Jesuit Relations, and standard references such as H. P. Biggar’s Works of Samuel de Champlain and Gustave Lancot’s A History of Canada.

Although Champlain and his wife, Helene Boulle, did not have children, his companions did. The original 18 pioneer families who inhabited Quebec during Champlain’s lifetime formed the nucleus of French-Canadian culture from which a new society sprang. They are the focal point of this work. The author traces the genealogy for three generations of the following 18 founding families: Amiot/Amyot, Boucher, Bourdon, Cloutier, Cote/Coste, Couillard/Couillart, Delaunay, Desportes, Giffard, Guyon, Hebert (Quebec’s first colonial family, Hebert, is followed through five generations), Juchereau, Langlois, Marsolet, Martin, Nicolet, Pinguet, and Tardif/Letardif. The author also presents a methodology by which readers can trace their lineage in a quest to link with one of Quebec’s founding families. Genealogical chart information was extracted from documents and records held at the Archives nationales du Quebec; in city, state, parochial, and provincial offices; and from reliable secondary sources, such as the genealogical dictionaries of Cyprien Tanguay and Rene Jette.

Other important features of this groundbreaking work include maps, an illustration of Champlain’s 1603 astrolabe, references, five appendices, lineage and pedigree charts with citations, and a comprehensive index. Appendices provide a glossary of French genealogical terminology and an example of citation notation for use when filling in ancestral charts, one of which is provided for reproduction. The full-reference citation method described in the book is unique in that it is keyed from the numbering sequence on commonly used charts and does not require the superscripts and complex systems often found in genealogy.

Kaskaskia
Illinois–to–French Dictionary
Edited by Carl Masthay

a retired medical manuscript editor at Mosby, Inc., for 33 years, began early study of Algonquian languages stimulated by place-name study culminating in a 47-page monograph on Mahican-language hymns (1980) and 11 years of work on his 200-page Schmick’s Mahican Dictionary, published by the American Philosophical Society in 1991.

For about 300 years a major overwhelmingly dense document in an Algonquian language now identified as “Kaskaskia Illinois” remained unworked on and thus unpublished so as to be usable. It was first found in the early 1800s by Monsignor Rosati of St. Louis and was acquired later in that century by James Hammond Trumbull, who attempted to transcribe it. It is a monster in size at 580 pages as well as in legibility, with many cramped words and interlinear additions and overwritten deletions. The language of translation is French with a heavy sprinkling of obscure words. The manuscript is preserved in legibility, with many cramped words and interlinear additions and overwritten deletions.

The language of translation is French with a heavy sprinkling of obscure words. The manuscript is preserved in legibility, with many cramped words and interlinear additions and overwritten deletions. A context of the times is elucidated with an initial article by David Costa overviewing the Illinois language and continues with a reprinting of J.F. Bannon’s biography of Gabriel Marest S.J. Carl Masthay has also provided a reprinting of J.F. Bannon’s biography of Gabriel Marest S.J. Carl Masthay has also provided all other Kaskaskia words from external sources (except, of course, for Le Boulenger’s later major work in about 1720), provided a view of a manuscript page, described and portrayed letter-ductus problems to identify the compiler or compilers, and abstracted all abbreviations (Latin and French), ethonyms, numerals, unidentified lemmas (headwords), non-Illinois words, obscure words, and problem words.

A Chronicle of Military Service of Six Americans
George J. Lambert

The eighth son of Madeleine and Eddie Lambert, George was the last but certainly not the least as he towered over all his “big brothers” when he reached six-four by age sixteen.

As a youngster, George relished the oft-repeated stories of the six Lambert boys who served in the military in exotic locales like Guadalcanal, Trieste, Tsingtao, Seoul, Tokyo, and Rabat.

Brothers and Heroes illustrates George’s love of family and his admiration and respect for his oldest brother, Armand, already a Marine when George was born. Initially motivated by a desire to learn more about the brother he never knew and the circumstances of his death on Guam, George later expanded his research to include the military records of each brother, devoting countless hours to this daunting task. The discovery of the factors that led to Armand’s landing in the Marianas on that fateful day of 21 July 1944 led George to seek and obtain a correction of the official records for what he perceived as a gross miscarriage of justice.
An Ode To Onias

by his nephew, Mac Martin

Leaving home or coming home,
The direction wasn't clear.
Onias' ancestors he'd left behind,
He now was drawing near.

Bourgeueil, Nova Scotia, Madawaska,
And back to France again.
Always hard to bear the plight
Of his fellow Acadians.

This cause was somewhat different
Than Those they'd fought before.
The German forces stronger now,
Were knocking at their door.

To Europe he went to start the fight,
And among the ruins he'd find
A pleasant distraction, an English girl,
His lifelong love with heart so kind.

His time with her was much too short,
Across the channel he went
To serve his country honorably,
In Bonnetable his soul was spent.

Now, Albert Guillman resided there,
A true hero he had been.
Underground, he'd hid the Jews,
Even claimed them as his kin.

Meanwhile, the many German troops
Were foiling Ally attacks.
The youths set up the mine fields
To stop them in their tracks.

But Guillman was wise, he knew the plan,
He warned them of their fate.
Directed them a different route
Than through the Nazi gate.

The diversion, alas, was not enough.
Germans at the crossroads would wait
With horse drawn cannon to fire at them,
'Twas only Onias who met his fate.

At that, the Americans returned the fire
With double force for their comrade's sake.
Then innocent boys lay at their feet,
Never a man would any make.

Guillman approached the battleground,
All corpses German, save one.
With respect and grateful admiration
He treated him as his son.

A blanket was placed upon his face,
And flowers upon his chest.
Onias had returned to France,
And there he'd found his rest.

Leaving home or coming home,
The direction wasn't clear.
Onias' ancestors he'd left behind,
He now was drawing near.
Chanson de Grand Pré
By/par Danielle Laliberté

Grand Pré
where are you now
that they call your children
Canucks?

We promised
we’d return to you someday,
la vielle patrie

My skin is pale and I speak English sans accent.
Some Sundays I’ve forgotten
to go to Mass,
but I never forgot you.

Grand Pré
Je suis retournée.
I see you
In the first snow of winter
The grass of summer
The blue eyes of my blond.

I bow my head,
fait le deuil
my hair a permanent dark veil.

Grand Pré, il faut vous oublierait.

MES PRIÈRES
Par Virginie Sand

J’offre mes prières à ma grand-mère, la lune d’or,
Avec toute sa magie,
Pour influencer mon avenir.

J’offre mes prières au soleil brillant,
Avec toute sa magie,
Pour faire ma vie douce.

J’offre mes prières à toutes les fleurs,
Avec toute leur magie,
En apportant plus de couleur à ma vie ; la rose, le jaune, le vert, le violet…

J’offre mes prières au cimetière des pierres grises,
Avec toute sa magie,
En demandant à mes ancêtres pour leur conseil et leur sagesse.

J’offre mes prières à la rose,
Avec toute sa magie,
Pour apporter l’amour à mon cœur.

MY PRAYERS
By Virginia Sand

I offer my prayers to my grandmother, the golden moon,
With all her magic,
For influencing my future.

I offer my prayers to the brilliant sun,
With all of it’s magic,
For making my life sweet.

I offer my prayers to all the flowers,
With all their magic,
In bringing more color to my life; pink, yellow, green, violet…

I offer my prayers to the cemetery of grey stones,
With all of it’s magic,
In asking my ancestors for their counsel and wisdom.

I offer my prayers to the rose,
With all her magic,
For bringing love to my heart.

et Marie Guyon ainsi que Robert Drouin et Anne Cloutier signèrent dans la maison de Giffard, leur contrat de mariage rédigé par Jean Guyon qui, pour la circonstance, se fit notaire. L’année suivante, en juillet, ce sera pour ces deux couples un premier mariage religieux double en Nouvelle-France.

Quand François Bélanger a-t-il quitté Beauport?

Si la carte de Bourdon de 1641 indique que François Bélanger est propriétaire d’une concession à Château Richer, cela signifie-t-il pour autant qu’il ait quitté Beauport définitivement cette année? En vertu du principe déjà énoncé qu’on choisit les parrains et les marraines parmi les proches de son domicile, nous pouvons affirmer que dès 1643 François Bélanger était arrivé à la seigneurie de Beauport. Aux baptêmes de ses filles M.-Madeleine et Marguerite en 1643 et 1645, les marraines sont des Legardeur qui possèdent un fief à la seigneurie de Beauport sur lequel il y a une maison. M. Madeleine Legardeur est marraine de M.-Madeleine Bélanger et Marguerite Nicolet, future épouse de J.-Baptiste Legardeur, est marraine de Marguerite Bélanger. Comme dans le cas des baptêmes à Beauport, la cérémonie est rehaussée par des seigneurs du lieu.

Au tout début, nous dit Lucien Campeau, les familles se regroupaient11. Dans les années 1641-1643, la maison sur la concession dénommée l’abri à Cloutier, voisine de la terre de François Bélanger, a pu être un pied-à-terre pour les familles Bélanger, Cloutier et Guyon. Trois autres familles - les Drouin, Boissel et Estienne-, situées plus à l’est, près de la Rivière aux Chiens, se seraient regroupées dans celle de ce dernier dessinée elle aussi sur la carte de Bourdon. Nous avons pour cette année la confirmation que l’une des deux maisons de Château-Richer était habitée. Selon le baptistère du 15 mai 1641 de Noël Boissel, fils de Jacques et de Marie Eripel, la cérémonie du baptême a eu lieu en « l’une des deux maisons de Beaupré ». Éventuellement, s’ajouteraient les maisons sur les concessions des Repentigny et des Couillard représentées sur la carte de Bourdon. De 1641 à 1643, pendant que François travaillait à sa maison et sur sa terre, il a sans doute occupé, en raison de sa proximité avec sa concession, l’abri à Cloutier avec d’autres compagnons. Jusqu’en 1643, son épouse avec ses deux enfants Charles et M.-Madeleine nés respectivement en 1640 et 1643 demeuraient davantage chez ses parents à Beauport. En 1644, au début du désertage en commun de sa terre avec Macé Gravel, il est possible que François ait habité sa propre maison mais la terre n’étant pas prête à recevoir la semence, son épouse habitait peut-être encore chez ses parents avec un troisième enfant - Marguerite - née en 1645.

Un achat de deux poinçons de blé à Pierre Legardeur en 1647 nous oriente dans ce sens. Cet emprunt, ajouté au désertage en commun avec son voisin Macé Gravel entre 1644 et 1647, est peut-être l’indice que leur terre respective n’était pas encore suffisamment préparée ou productive puisque Gravel emprunte lui aussi le huit septembre 1647 de Pierre Legardeur de Repentigny la somme de 100 livres pour vente et livraison de blé.21 Cet emprunt pose donc la question de l’installation définitive de François à sa maison de Château-Richer conditionnée par un autre facteur, celui du règlement de la crise du foin aux seigneuries de Beauport et de Beaupré. Selon Pouliot et Giroux, François Bélanger et tous les autres « déserteurs » de Beauport se seraient installés définitivement à Château-Richer en 164711. Il fallait, selon lui, que le problème des pâturages soit réglé, ce qui eût lieu uniquement en 1647. Ceci a retardé la concession juridique des concessions par les seigneurs de Beauport aux propriétaires dont les noms sont indiqués sur la carte de 1641. Sauf celles de Pierre Gagnon et de Claude Estienne à qui les terres sont octroyées officiellement en 1640, aucune autre ne l’est officiellement avant 1650 par Olivier Letardif.

When did François Bélanger leave Beauport?

François Belanger as a property owner in Chateau Richer, does this also indicate that he has left Beauport by that year? In virtue of the custom of choosing godparents from among those close to one's residence, we can affirm that from 1643 François Belanger had arrived at the Seigneurie of Beauport. At the baptisms of his daughters, M. Madeleine & Marguerite in 1643 and 1645 respectively, the godmothers were Legardeurs who owned a fief at the Beaufort Seigneurie with a house on it. M. Madeleine Legardeur was godmother to M. Madeleine Belanger and Marguerite Nicolet, future wife of J. Baptiste Legardeur, was godmother to Marguerite Belanger. As was the case with the baptisms of Beauport, the ceremony was highlighted by the presence of Seigneurs of the region.

From the start, says Lucien Campeau, the families formed groups. From the years 1641-1643, the home on the concession named l'abri a Cloutier, neighbor to the François Belanger farm, was probably a foot in the door, so to speak, for the Belanger, Cloutier and Guyon families. Three other families, the Drouins, Boissois and Estiennes, located more to the East near the Dog River (Riviere aux Chiens), were grouped and shown on the latest design of the Bourdon map. We have confirmation for that year that one of the houses at Chateau Richer was inhabited. According to the baptismal record of 15 May 1641 for Noël Boissel, son of Jacques and Marie Eripel, the baptismal ceremony was held in "one of the two houses of Beaufort". Eventually, the houses on the concessions of Repentigny and Couillard were added as shown on the Bourdon map. From 1641 to 1643, while François worked at his house and on his farm, no doubt lived at l'abri a Cloutier along with other companions, by virtue of it's proximity to his concession. Until 1643, his wife and two children, Charles and M. Madeleine born respectively in 1640 and 1643, lived gratis with her parents in Beaufort. In 1644, when François started clearing his farm with Macé Gravel, it is possible that he lived in his own home but the land was not ready for seeding, his wife possibly still lived with her parents with a third child, Marguerite, born in 1645.

A purchase of two pincorns of wheat from Pierre Legardeur in 1647 gives us a clue. This loan, added to the clearing of the common land with his neighbor Macé Gravel between 1644 and 1647, is possibly an indication that their respective farms were not yet sufficiently prepared and productive because Gravel also borrows on 8 September 1647 from Pierre Legardeur of Repentigny the total of 100 pounds of wheat for resale and feeding. This loan poses yet another question about the final settlement of François in his home at Chateau Richer because of the hay crisis in the Seigneuries of Beaufort and Beaupre. According to Pouliot and Giroux, François Belanger and all the other "deserters" (a deserter was a tenant farmer who abandoned his concession for one reason or another) of Beaufort had definitely settled in Chateau Richer in 1647. According to him, the problem of pasturage had to be settled which happened in 1647. This delayed the legal conveyance of concessions by the Seigneurs of Beaufort to the owners whose names are written on the Bourdon map of 1641. Except for that of Pierre Gagnon and Claude Estienne whose farms were officially conveyed in 1640, others were not official until done before 1650 by Olivier Letardif. (Continued on page 30) world’s scale, underscores the influence it has on the world around it. Québec is saying, “Come look at us, see what we’ve accomplished, and above all, have a good time while you are here”.
It is spring in the north, and in Québec the snow and ice may be melting, but not the warm and generous hearts of its inhabitants. Now that the internationally known Winter Carnival and traditional outdoor sports of skiing, skating, snowshoeing and sledding are unseasonable, excited anticipation is in the air for the grand celebration of July 3rd, 2008. Ice sculptures at Winter Carnival depicted Samuel de Champlain of France, Québec’s lauded founder, in a prelude to the spectacular events to come. From May 2-18 Canada is hosting for the first time the 2008 International Ice Hockey Federation games at Colisée Pepsi. IIHF is marking its 100th anniversary, coinciding with Québec’s 400th. There will be 30 games in Québec City and 26 in Halifax with 16 countries participating in the contests.

Five and a half million visitors are expected throughout 2008 - 270,000 for the 400th year anniversary alone. Some 30 international conferences, conventions and meetings have chosen Québec City as their venue in 2008 to specifically take advantage of the festivities. For example, the 4th Québec-New York Economic Summit co-chaired by Premier Jean Charest and New York Governor Eliot Spitzer on May 20th. Laval University will host the 4th World Youth Congress, inviting 600 of the world’s most dynamic young people in the field of sustainable community development.

The numerous hotels, bed and breakfasts, inns, restaurants, and events will accommodate them with efficiency, graciousness and style. Scores of jobs will enrich the economy. The entire labor force is rolling up its sleeves and rolling out the red carpet. The capability of hosting such a large number of countries from around the world further validates the hard working people of Québec, adding to their sense of pride to be Québécois.

To ring in the anniversary, an unprecedented “concert of a thousand” with Québec Symphony Orchestra conductor Yoav Talmi took place at the Colisée Pepsi on Saturday night, March 15th. Malher’s Symphony No. 8 was featured for an official theme song. A song contest was held by Espace Musique for an official theme song. Danny Boudreau of Petit-Rocher won out of 300 participants countrywide. So Many Tales, “Québec je te chante” has as its theme rencontres (meetings) of peoples from around the world.

Espace 400e is the official site of celebrations for the 400th Anniversary. Located on Louise Basin, in the Old Port of Québec, it is the designated site for the center of festivities. First Nations, the country’s original inhabitants, will host special programs and activities to honor their legacy. Over 2,000 street performances, 700 artists from every discipline, 100 children’s workshops, a multimedia exhibition on human migration, and debates and round table discussions will be presented here. In 2009 the Espace 400e pavilion will become a Parks Canada Discovery Centre.

For Québec’s 300th Anniversary in 1908, the Government of Canada gave the residents the Plains of Abraham. It developed the upper city. Today the focus is on more public access to the magnificent Saint Lawrence River, and the city itself has cleaned up Rivière Saint-Charles, restoring the banks and creating trails. One hundred sixty million dollars is allocated for refurbishing Québec City.

Forty million dollars has been spent on new construction on the waterfront alone. Canada Economic Development is providing funding to the Port of Québec. The Port of Québec and the Government of Canada is revitalizing three sites:

1. Baie de Beauport will feature a recreational path for walks and bird watching, a beach, sports facilities, a new service building and multitudinous parking.

2. Pointe-À-Carey, long a major hub economically and culturally, boasts an ultra-modern port facility as the debarcation point for cruise ships, a public promenade and children’s playground, all in keeping with respect for this historic site on the beautiful St. Lawrence.

3. Bassin Brown has always been a link between the Plains of Abraham and the river. Here at Cap-Blanc General James Wolfe (British officer) engaged in battle the Marquis de Montcalm (French officer) in 1759. Tragically, that September 13th battle of the month long siege ended both of their life.
Our country home was an ideal place to grow up. Mom and Dad were the heart of our home. With them we lived happily, actively, and fully. There, from our parents we learned to love, to work, to have fun, and to pray. The wide open spaces, the hills, the bright sunny days, and the starry nights revealed to us something greater than ourselves—the grandeur of God.

The new world opened up to us as we began our school days at Lonesome Tail, one mile from home. This one room school was built on an isolated treeless area. A large stove to the right during the cold winter months. There were two cloakrooms at each of the front entrances. Sometimes a student was sent there as a punishment, and a cry could be heard when the stap was used.

In the morning there was a lot of activity to get ready for school. Eight lunches were made and put into paper bags or karo pails. Mom combed Mae's curls, and saw to it that we were neatly dressed. Finally, everything was quiet in the house as we left for school. Mom was left with the younger ones—Rita, Dennis, Leo, and Ralph.

The teacher in the grade school had to be well organized and prepared to teach grades one through eight. Classes were only ten to fifteen minutes long. The grade to be taught was called to the front of the room while the others studied or helped younger ones. At times, notes were written and passed unnoticed by the teacher. As there was only one bookcase in the school, books were read and re-read.

Recess and noon hours were for fun and games. After a quick drink at the well and lunch, favorite games were played such as anti-anti-i-over, crach the whip, pum pum pull away, kitten ball, penie stick, etc. During the cold winters indoor games were in order. Tagging someone with each eraser on the head without it falling was tricky.

Our great grandfather, Isidore Beuseau, who worked at the New Richmond ski factory gave us each a pair of skis. There were eight pairs lined up on the back porch. Skiing to school, up and down the hills, was faster than walking. On cold stormy days Dad came for us with the sleigh. On those days the general attendance was poor, but not for our family. Only the Germains were at school! No storm kept us away.

In the spring when the ice began to melt on the ponds, we dared to walk on the rubber ice. What a thrill to go up and down! One time I (Ella) wasn't quick enough. I went down with my new 3rd grade arithmetic book. My brothers, Delore and Andrew rescued me, but I was inconsolable because my book was all wet. Mom consoled me, gave me dry clothes, and dried the book.

An important event during our grade school was practicing for the Christmas program. The teacher found a part for everyone—songs, recitations, poems, skits, and pantomime. All of the parents would be present, so great care was taken to prepare well.

At one of our programs Andrew sang and dramatized, “When I Was a Baby.” The song was a big hit. Everyone in the audience started to laugh and could not stop. We called it the laughing song. It went down in history. Andrew still sings it at parties and reunions.

When I a baby they tickled me so

I never got over it quite.
Although now I'm grown up
Wherever I go, I'm laughing
From morning til night.
My nurse used to tickle me
When I was asleep.
My mother would tickle my chin
My daddy would tickle
My poor little feet
And then I would always begin
Oh-ha-ha-ha-ha etc.

Another time Andrew pantomimed his troubles with his old Ford. It just wouldn't start. There was always a putt-putt and then it died. Once it got started, he had a flat tire. It was one trouble after another. He had the audience in stitches.

When Urban was in the middle grades he recited and dramatized the poem, "Christmas is Near." He sent me a handwritten copy of it when I was studying in Bourg, Franc. Here is a copy of it and his letter. (See letter to the right).

High School

After having attended a small country school, going to New Richmond High was a new world. The building was immense. Instead of three in a class, there were twenty-five or more. Because we lived three miles from school, we went by car. Delore was the driver. In our hurry to arrive on time, we sometimes landed in the ditch. Our family enjoyed our school days in New Richmond. We were involved in extra-curricular activities such as drama, chorus, class parties, dances, basketball, football, and the Prom. After Delore, Andrew, Claire and I graduated, the second half of the family attended New Richmond High.

Mom and Dad knew the importance of education for our future years. Their interest and encouragement helped each one in the family to merit a high school diploma. Delore graduated in 1930, and he took a teacher's training course in New Richmond. His first experience in teaching was at Lonesome Trail in the fall of 1932. His wages the first year were $65 a month. The next year he had a ten dollar raise. Among his pupils were his brothers Dennis and Urban, and his sister Rita.

Andrew and I graduated in 1932. It was during the Great Depression. Because our parents knew how to manage and save, we were never in need. Andrew and I ordered our class ring gold with a black onyx stone for $6.50! The class chose to graduate without the usual caps and gowns because of the hard times.

In the fall I entered the convent of the Sisters of St. Joseph in Crookston, Minnesota. Andrew learned mechanics from Uncle Phil Laventure. Later he joined the Air Force and served in World War II. After the war, Andrew worked in an industrial plant as a foreman in California and Chicago.

Claire finished high school in 1933, and entered the Sisters of St. Joseph, also in Crookston. Claire and I both studied in Bourg, France for 2 1/2 years. After our training we taught school in Minnesota and Wisconsin where the Sisters had schools.

In 1936 Mae received her diploma at St. Joseph’s Academy in Crookston. She took a business course in St. Paul, and then worked in the Bank of New Richmond. Urban graduated in 1939. He helped Dad on the farm, and worked in St. Paul. In 1943, Rita received her diplom at and later worked at 3M. Dennis graduated in 1945. He worked at Anderson’s in Stillwater. Leo graduated in 1946. He was in the service for a time, and then worked at Minnesota Mining. Ralph, the last one in the family, graduated in 1948. He also worked at 3M.

lives within a few hours. There is a new interpretation center and a promenade from the Cap-Blanc stairs to the shore of St. Lawrence and newly renovated, historic Léonard wharf. These are all multi-use areas open to the pleasure of the general public.

As for ground transportation, if one arrives at Jean-Lesage airport, taxi fares to downtown Québec are metered out per trip, accommodating one to six persons for approximately $30.00 total. The public Métrobus is an efficient way to maneuver unencumbered about the city. This bus company provides a liaison between the principal centers of activities. Métrobus is known for its “high frequency” service with runs throughout the city and surroundings at just about any time of day. The fees are reasonable. And, you might find yourself on an articulated bus for the first time!

If you try to make reservations for summer and find yourself shut out of first choices in the ville, by all means try the outskirts. Finding rooms outside the walls of the old city often omits higher car parking fees. Sillery and Sainte-Foy abound in lodgings well worth considering. Rental cars are always an option if one does not arrive by car, and would like to explore the wider area, Îsl d’Orléans for example. Most grape vineyards there offer tours and wine taste-testing.

Laurier Québec’s free shuttle service to a 350-store shopping mall, just out of town in Sainte-Foy, facilitates joining the locals at modern stores and food courts. Tour departures are convenient both morning and afternoon, including drop-offs for the Aquarium, and then returning to the ville both early afternoon and before dinner. Very nice!

Horse and carriage rides are popular with many tourists. This mode of travel allows them to experience, at least the ambience of, an unhurried Old Québec.

For those strolling the quaint streets on these festive days, who knows whom one may encounter? Dignitaries and celebrities from all over Canada, and the world for that matter, will sojourn alike. Mr. John Charest, Premier of Québec might be sighted, or the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Stephen Harper. Céline Dion is expected to sing on the Plains of Abraham. It is rumored that even Pope Benedict XVI, or one of his emissaries, may grace the 49th International Eucharistic Congress in June (to be announced).

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police are charged with security for dignitaries. They showcase a Musical Riders performance to promote the RCMP image. On July 3rd, hosted by the National Battlefields Commission, a troop of thirty-two riders and horses will perform their cavalry drill choreographed to music. In a “march past” the troop traditionally salutes the guest of honor.

Historical sites to visit inside the walls include Place Royal, the cradle of Québec’s civilization with its Notre Dame des Victoires church from Champlain’s day, having suspended from the ceiling a centuries old replica of the bateau that held his crew of thirty men; Notre-Dame de Québec Basilica-Cathedral on Buade Street; Fortifications of Québec (4.6 kilometre-long defense wall); the Citadelle- known as the Gibraltar of America- and lastly, Artillery Park. Just outside the walls on Parliament Hill is the Hôtel du Parlement, housing the National Assembly, Battlefields Park recalling the famous battles between the British and French armies on its Plains of Abraham (now an enormous urban park, the venue for some of the larger crowd drawing events of the 400th anniversary) and Musée national des beaux-arts du Québec.

Underscoring friendship, and ever-broadening ties between other countries and Canada, are generous lasting gifts marking the anniversary. The Netherlands has sent its traditional gift of 10,000 tulip bulbs. Belgium and the United States donated stone benches to the city. Bordeaux, France has given stone gargoyles to be mounted on City Hall. And La Rochelle, France’s gift to the Governor General of Canada is the “livre de Champlain” to be exhibited at the Citadelle. Based on Samuel de Champlain’s notebooks, the pages of this original work of art have been copied by hand onto canvas on wood. The pages are 2.2 metres high and 1.5 metres wide. The book weighs 500 kilograms. Yet, it will be set up so that visitors will be able to turn the pages themselves.

The following is just a smattering of diverse events that may attract people of different cultures, creeds and simply interests:

Image Mill June 20 - July 29; each evening at 10:00 pm an outdoor Megaprojection of the History of Québec on the enormous Bunge grain silos next to Bassin Louise. These concrete silos will become a giant movie screen.

49th International Eucharistic Congress June 15 - 22; ExpoCité, Plains of Abraham and a night procession through the streets of the ville on June 17 ---coinciding with the 4th World Youth Congress on June 22 400th Anniversary Celebration parade day, July 3rd; beginning with a mass at the Notre-Dame de Québec Basilica-Cathedral

RCMP Musical Ride July 3rd Québec plein la rue series July 3 - 5 will invite international street performance companies for a North American premiere Gathering of Nations August 14 - 24; International Festival of Military Bands, Place George V

Céline Dion Free Public Concert Friday night, August 22 on the Plains of Abraham Cirque du Soleil October 19; closing of the festivities performance at Colisée Pepsi

The second half of the official program will be forthcoming soon at <http://www.MyQuebec2008.com>

All of Canada may claim ownership in commemorating its beginnings, and deservedly so, since all of Canada is contributing, each in its own unique way. This Olympic-sized 400th anniversary celebration is a beautifully executed example of a fairly small, but rich culture that is demonstrating its content. Today, having become one of Canada’s most vital cities, Québec City is the American continent’s flower of Frenchness.

Venez au Québec!
“Pourtant il y a une suite à ça,” dit un ami à l’auteur du monologue sur scène, La Souillonne. Et bien, la voilà cette Souillonne qui se «débourre le coeur» une deuxième fois. Elle nous parle des Acadadiens, des écornifleuses, des défoncés et des paniers parcés, de la ration et la guerre, des gens de travers, des accoutumances, le parlement du not’ monde, les récettes de ma mère, et d’autres. Parmi ces monologues sur scène on y découvre une jolie petite histoire d’une veuve étroitement attachée à son petit oiseau qui lui donne chaque jour une raison de vivre. C’est Le marle à mémére Tanguay. La Souillonne, deusse vient rajouter au premier monologue une nouvelle ouverture sur la vie de la Souillonne qui non seulement séduit le lecteur mais lui révèle la richesse d’une langue et d’un glossaire en voie de disparition. Gérard Robichaud, auteur franco-américain, “n’arrêtait pas de dire combien il avait aimé La Souillonne (sur scène). Il a dit bien des fois, ‘This is authentic Franco-American humor,’” nous raconte Robert Perreault lui-même auteur franco-américain de Manchester, N.H.

Le monologue sur scène, LA SOUILLONNE, a remporté tellement de succès à son auteur, Normand Beaupré, qu’il s’est décidé d’écrire une suite à son oeuvre après avoir vu la performance de Marie Cormier par trois reprises dans le rôle de la Souillonne. Encore une fois, il a retrouvé les sujets de son oeuvre dans ses propres expériences des années passées alors qu’il grandissait dans un milieu franco. Tant de personnes s’identifient avec la Souillonne, nous dit l’auteur, parce qu’elles ont vécu les mêmes expériences qu’a vécues la Souillonne. De plus, les oeuvres La Souillonne [première] et La Souillonne, deusse sont écrites en dialecte franco-américain, la langue du peuple franco. La matière et la langue de ces deux monologues font de ces oeuvres un travail unique. Peggy Pacini qui est diplômée de l’Université de la Sorbonne Paris IV a écrit dans son article intitulé, Présence visible et invisible de la langue française dans la littérature franco-américaine contemporaine, janvier 2007, “Cette conclusion que Normand Beaupré met dans la bouche de cette femme franco-américaine de soixante-neuf ans évoque par-delà La Souillonne la réalité sociale, culturelle et linguistique de toute la communauté franco-américaine contemporaine. Le choix qui est le sien de laisser raconter à cette femme l’histoire de sa vie, de lui laisser se «débourrer» le coeur dans la langue populaire des Franco-Américains de la Nouvelle-Angleterre, est en soi une forme de survivance, comme Beaupré le souligne dans sa préface, puisqu’elle est, pour lui, «la gardienne d’un glossaire et d’une race».

La Souillonne, deusse est la neuvième oeuvre publiée par Normand Beaupré. Il est présentement à sa dixième, un roman basé sur la vie et les oeuvres d’art de Vincent Van Gogh à Arles.

Author Norman Beaupré writes a sequel to La Souillonne

The dramatic monologue, La Souillonne, was such a tremendous success for its author, Norman Beaupré that it prompted a friend of his to say, “There must be a follow-up to this.” The author replied that he had not thought about it and that he did not think he had enough material in his creative imagination to write a sequel. However, after seeing the performance of the play twice at the Franco-American Heritage Center in Lewiston and seeing it again in Lamèque, New Brunswick this past summer performed to a sell-out crowd, he began to sift ideas in his mind especially once he heard sea stories by the performer, Marie Cormier’s brother, Angelbert Paulin who had caught fish and crabs out in the open seas for some forty years. Beaupré now had at his disposition some materials about Acadians and the sea. He then set out to line up other topics such as, the snoops [les écornifleuses], the famished and the tell-it-alls [les défoncés et les paniers parcés], WWII and the ration [la ration et la guerre], the melting pot, the shoe shops, odd people [les gens de travers], old habits [les accoutumances], our way of speaking [le parlement de not’ monde] and my mother’s recipes [les récettes de ma mère]. Among them is a particular story designed to stir the feelings and the imagination of the reader, Le marle à mémére Tanguay. It’s a story of the pet bird of an old widow who caters to him and he in turn gives her a reason for living.

Dozens of voices celebrate—in essays, stories, plays, poetry, songs, and art—the Franco-American and Acadian experience in Maine. They explore subjects as diverse as Quebec-Maine frontier history, immigrant drama, work, genealogy, discrimination, women, community affairs, religion, archeology, politics, literature, language, and humor.

The voices, themselves, are equally diverse, including Norman Beaupré, Michael Michaud, Ross and Judy Paradis, Susann Pelletier, John Martin, Béatrice Craig, Michael Parent, Linda Pervier, Alaric Faulkner, Ray Levasseur, Yves Frenette, Paul Paré, Yvon Labbé, Rev. Clement Thibodeau, Bob Chenard, Denis Ledoux, Josée Vachon, Greg Chabot, Jean-Paul Poulain, Stewart Doty, Rhea Côté Robbins, and many others. This is a rich resource and an engaging read, one that will resonate with many.

The Adventures of Coco
the French Parrot
by Aunt Yvonne;
Illustrated by Rachel Keebler

About the Book: This book is for children and parents to read out loud. Laugh at Coco’s way to reach his goals, his great love of children, cats, and particularly Papa. Coco even was invited at school on day where he annoyed the teacher by interrupting her and was never given a second invitation.

Coco loved to be outside on the fence and talk to the neighbor’s kids, the cats, the hens and birds flying by.

Coco was a unique, charming, stub- born, comical bird who can teach you some French words without you even realizing it.

vulnerable to deportation at anytime. Once this turn of events were known to the Sitcha Defense Committee, they made an all-out campaign of making numerous telephone calls and writing letters and e-mails to Senators Dodd, Lieberman, Kerry and Kennedy, in an appeal to them to intercede on behalf of Sitcha. The hope was that either Sen. Kerry or Sen. Dodd could summit a special bill in Congress that would have prevented Sitcha from being deported. Members of the group asked Bishop Rosazza of the Archdiocese of Hartford to call the office of Sen. Dodd on behalf of Sitcha, and Bishop Rosazza did call Dodd’s office about Sitcha. However, the offices of each of the senators expressed little more than acknowledgement of reception of the communications.

Sitcha was deported on Jan. 23, 2008. He was awoken in his cell at the Plymouth County Correctional Facility (PCCF) in Plymouth, Mass., at 5AM under the pretext that he had a hearing in court. At 9AM, he was told that he was being deported, and he was moved from PCCF to the Federal Building in Hartford. While at the Federal Building in Hartford, Sitcha made the mistake of questioning the procedure of his deportation, and he was tackled by ten agents from Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) who assumed that he was resisting deportation. He was handcuffed behind his back, with his legs shackled, and he was then carried in the air by the agents, and thrown into a van. One agent screamed at Sitcha: “F you! We are stronger than you, and you will be deported today whatever you do. Immigrants have no rights here, and all the mother-Fer stuff you are asking for, will be burned!” The same agent videotaped Sitcha during the verbal abuse.

Sitcha was then transported from Hartford to JFK Airport in New York. From the time he was in New York City to the Cameroon, he was guarded by three agents from ICE, and his hands and feet were shackled. The first time he was allowed to use the toilet during the ordeal was when the plane landed in Paris, because the captain of the Air France plane interceded on behalf of Sitcha. From Paris, the plane went to the Cameroon, and before Sitcha was released, the U.S. agents returned a set of documents to Sitcha, which they claimed was his personal papers, however, his expired Cameroonian passport and his Cameroonian identification card were missing. The Cameroonian identification card that he received was that of another Cameroonian man who was held by DHS. When Sitcha left the plane, the only clothes that he had was his prison uniform, and sometime between PCCF and the Cameroon, he had lost his shoes.

The only help that Sitcha received from an official in the U.S. during the deportation is from a letter that Rep. John Olver of the First Congressional District in Massachusetts wrote to Sitcha while he was in the PCCF. The letter seems to have helped Sitcha pass through Customs, and he was not arrested by the Cameroonian police.

Sitcha is currently living underground somewhere in the Cameroon. He cannot travel because he does not have a valid identification card, which means that he cannot pass the police checkpoints that regularly exist on all major roads every 50 kilometers within the country. Also, without the identification card, he risks arrest by simply leaving the place where he is staying, so he is effectively under house arrest. He does have the fear of being arrested by the Douala Operational Command due to his role in aiding the families of the Bepanda Nine, who were murdered in 2001 by the said paramilitary police force. Since he cannot make a living, and his monetary assets are still in the United States, he is living on the charity of others. His supporters in Connecticut and Massachusetts, who are in periodic contact with him, are trying to figure a means to get his money to him, although he finally received a check from the PCCF during the first week of April 2008 for the sum from his prison account. Within two weeks of his arrival in the Cameroon, he contracted malaria, but he has since obtained medicine to combat the disease. Sitcha is effectively a prisoner of where he is hiding in his native country.

June 2, 1998, the FCGSC Board began the practice to hold meetings on the first Tuesday of the month.) The first problem never left Marcel, and it was the source of continual derision by some directors behind Marcel’s back. (One director, a woman, who admitted that she did not speak any French, was told by others that Marcel spoke “a crazy French.” However, Roger Lacerte, owner of La Libraire Populaire, spoke extensively to Marcel in French at the FCGSC Library on Oct. 19, 1996, and he learned that Marcel spoke an Acadian dialect of French, which is unusual since Marcel grew-up in Holyoke, Mass.) The third problem was settled years later when the contract between the FCGSC and the KHGS concerning the FCGSC Annex was properly understood to mean that the FCGSC Annex consisted of 180 books owned by the FCGSC were on loan to the KHGS. The matter of the sales tax, which arose because the FCGSC planned to participate in the 4th New England Regional Genealogical Conference that was held on April 24-27, 1997 in Cromwell, Conn., was settled by 1998, when Treas. Henri Lanouette and Dir. Arthur Desrochers made all the appropriate filings with the Dept. of Revenue Services at the State of Connecticut. (Curiously, the State of Connecticut later exempted historical societies from the collection of sales tax under Public Act No. 97-316.) Lastly, the end of Marcel’s Presidency was not a smooth transition of power to the person who was elected to the office on May 9, 1997, Elizabeth Kelley of Sturbridge, Mass., for she died of leukemia on Aug. 30, 1997, two days before she would have taken office. Because of her death, the Vice-President Elect, Charles Pelletier of Storrs, Conn., became the new President of the FCGSC on Sept. 1, 1997.

The positive tumult of Marcel’s Presidency of the FCGSC is best shown in 1996, when the library of the FCGSC has its greatest number of visitors, 2,557, in any single year of its existence. The previous year, the library had 2,431 visitors and then began a decline in 1997 with 2,364 visitors to the library. (The same library, still open four days a week ten years later, had 983 visitors in 2006, and in 2007, 1,100 visitors.) One cause in the peak year of visitors is the article, “When the Family’s from French Canada,” by Bill Ryan, published in the Conn. edition of the New York Times, Sun. Jan. 21, 1996. The article caused a jump in attendance of patrons to the FCGSC Library from southwestern Connecticut. The second cause is that the FCGSC participated in FrancoFest for the second and last time in October 1996. FrancoFest was an idea by Evelyn Sirois of Windsor, Conn., who was then President of Action for Franco-Americans of the North East (ActFANE), who thought that all of the French-Canadian organizations in the state could host a special event in the Fall of 1995, and for the event to be annual. Marcel had the philosophy of growth for the FCGSC, and for the FCGSC to participate with other organizations, an idea that some directors found threatening. In Sept. 1995, the FCGSC sponsored a talk given by Rod Wilsiom on Sun. Sept. 24, 1995, as participation in FrancoFest. In 1996, Marcel appointed Albert Marceau as the society’s program director, who organized eleven events in October 1996 that were held on the four Thursdays of the month that had workshops, two talks on genealogy, and four talks on the history of French Canada, and on Sat. Oct. 19, Roger Lacerte of La Libraire Populaire gave a talk, had a selection of his bookstore, and showed three documentaries and a drama. The best example of the fermentative character of the day occurred after Lacerte’s talk, when Rene Dugas of Taftville appeared for an unscheduled but welcomed talk about his book, The French Canadians in New England 1871-1930: Taftville, the Early Years, published in 1995. The society had 398 visitors to its library in October 1996, the single busiest month of the society’s existence. The events of October 1996 were billed in the FCGSC Newsletter for Sept. 1996 as, in Marcel’s words: “celebrating Family History Month AND FrancoFest ’96...,” and the reason for the dual celebration is that some directors felt that FrancoFest was either worthless, or would somehow take over the FCGSC, but that Family History Month was acceptable and conformed to the goals of a genealogical society. In 1997 and 1998 and later years, there were the Thursday seminars of Family History Month for October, but the spirit at the seminars were not the same as those of October 1996, because Marcel was not at the helm, encouraging the Board of the FCGSC to co-operate with other French-Canadian organizations, for the benefit of the FCGSC. Le Forum

Another means that Marcel encouraged growth of the FCOSC was that he advocated the development of the society’s first website, created by Richard Carpenter, the husband of Recording Secretary Christine Carpenter. Again, the idea appeared threatening to some directors, the same directors who rumored about the break-up of the FCOSC. Their fear was that something bad would happen, such as someone would hack into a database, a Personal Ancestry File, created by Art St. Martin of Broad Brook, Conn., (No. 385 FCOSC), which was on a computer in the main library of the society then, and the PAF would somehow get sucked into cyberspace. (Ironically, the PAF created by St. Martin may now be lost for a different reason, for it was on a hard-drive of a computer that has since been thrown away, and it is not known if St. Martin saved copies of his PAF on disks held by the FCOSC, because, he died on Apr. 23, 2003, and his surviving family has since moved out of state.) Nevertheless, Richard Carpenter created the FCOSC website, through his home computer, so the first URL of the FCOSC has his name in it, and it was first published in the Dec. 1996 Maple Leaflet. (The same URL is found in the appendix section of Armand Chartier’s book, published in 1999, The Franco-Americans of New England: A History.) Carpenter changed the URL on Feb. 8, 1999, still with his name in it, and the address first appeared in the April 1999 Maple Leaflet. In 2001, the FCOSC Board finally approved to purchase an URL, and it first appeared in the Oct. 2001 Maple Leaflet, and it is still in use today, [http://www.fcosc.org]tumultuouswww.fcosc.org.

Marcel Roy was the official representative of the FCOSC at the 56th Convention of the Union des Franco-Américains du Connecticut (UFAC), held on the weekend of Oct. 25-26, 1997 at the Marco Polo Restaurant in East Hartford. The convention was led by Pres. Normand Morneault and Vice-Pres. Therese Lachance, both of Bristol, Conn. The subject of the convention was whether or not to dissolve the UFAC and on the second day, the conventioners voted to maintain it. Pres. Morneault said that all the participants would be contacted in the future, for any developments and the next triannual convention of UFAC. On March 14, 1998, the board of the FCOSC voted to associate with UFAC. UFAC sponsored an exhibition of wood carvings called Sur Bois that was held at the Institute for Community Research in Hartford, and FCOSC Dir. George Duigle had his 15 minutes of fame, because he entered four of his wood carvings to the exhibit, and on the opening night, Sat. Oct. 1, 1998, he was interviewed by WFSB-TV Channel 3, and the interview was broadcast on the 11PM news.

Marcel Roy was on the Building Association of the French Social Circle (FSC) in East Hartford, Conn., and he would be seen at their functions, such as the monthly club breakfasts.

Marcel Roy is best known for being the Building Superintendent of the FCOSC, which meant he did the unglamorous jobs of cleaning the waste baskets and the toilet, and changing the light bulbs, as well as building shelves for the library, and tables for the annual book sale. Once or twice a month, when he worked as the librarian on Sundays, he would often go to Mass at St. Matthew’s in Tolland in the morning, and he would open the library at noon, one hour early, and he would bring some donuts for the other librarians and patrons. In the 1990s, he often worked as a librarian with Diane Lenti, while in more recent years, he worked with Estelle Gothberg, both of Manchester. Marcel’s apparent adult attention deficit disorder was still a problem that he had, and sometimes caused frustration with other directors, but he was respected for his intentions, for he was hard-working, and he never belittled anyone in the society. On the contrary, in the early 1990s, he was against the censure of one director and past president of the FCOSC who was accused of stealing large numbers of photocopies from the FCOSC, for his rumored genealogical society. It was Marcel’s attitude that all the directors were involved in the theft of free copies for personal use, and that the censure was hypocrisy, led by a clique within the board of directors.

At the FCOSC board meeting of Tues. Feb. 5, 2008, Patrick Lausier gave a report of his visit with Marcel Roy, and he said that if did not know if Marcel were in the particular hospital room, he would not have recognized him, for Marcel lost a great deal of weight, as well as his hair. He also said that he sometimes helped Frances Roy, since she does not have a license to drive, and he would take her to the hospital to see Marcel.

I visited Marcel Roy once, on Thurs. Feb. 21, 2008, from 7:30 to 8:02PM, when he was in Room 603 of Hartford Hospital, in a wing dedicated for cancer patients. I was psychologically prepared by Pat Lausier’s description, so, I was not as horrified at Marcel’s emaciated body as I expected to have been horrified. When I entered the room, he was asleep, and I waited a while, and even asked a nurse if I should wake him. She said there was no problem in waking him, and we talked a while, awkwardly. All the while I spoke to him, I continually thought of the character Gollum, as portrayed by Andy Serkis in Peter Jackson’s film trilogy, The Lord of the Rings, because Marcel was emaciated, and lost most of his hair, and his eyes were larger in his face than when I remembered him at the last board meeting of Nov. 6, 2007. I stayed only two minutes after the official visiting hours were over, in part to observe the rules, in part because I lacked anything else to say to him. As I remember the conversation, he thanked me for the Masses that I had said for his health at my home parish of Ste-Anne/Immaculate Conception in Hartford, and that he expressed concern for the health of my aging parents.

Before Marcel died, he received the last rites from his pastor, Fr. Robert Roy of St. Rose Parish in East Hartford. On Fri. Mar. 28, 2008, Frances Roy telephoned specific persons to notify them of Marcel’s death, and they in turn, notified others either by e-mail or by phone. On Sat. Mar. 29, I wrote a notice for the bulletin board of the FCOSC Library about Marcel’s death and funeral. There were no visiting hours at the Newkirk and Whitney Funeral Home in East Hartford, and (Continued on page 41)

Marcel’s obituary was first published in the Manchester Journal-Inquirer on Wed. April 2, 2008, the day after the funeral.

The funeral mass for Marcel Roy was held on Tues. April 1, 2008 at his home parish of St. Rose Church in East Hartford, and it was said by Fr. Robert Roy, the pastor of St. Rose, as well as the parishes of St. Mary and St. Isaac Jogues in East Hartford. The interior of St. Rose Church has only two stained-glass windows, all others frosted white, and the sanctuary is centered by three banks of pews. The free-standing altar and podium are made of stained wood, equidistant from the center of the sanctuary. The tabernacle is also made of stained wood, and it is centered and affixed to the back wall of the sanctuary.

The pallbearers for Marcel Roy were James Ashmore, Jim Smyth, who was Marcel’s next door neighbor, Patrick Lausier of the FCGSC and the FSC, John Dionne of the FSC, Albert Marceau of the FCGSC, and one of the undertakers from Newkirk and Whitney. The pallbearers carried the casket from the hearse, up the steps of the church, and into the narthex, where it was placed on a church truck, and two undertakers wheeled it towards the sanctuary.

Marcel’s casket, which is made of stained wood with brass fittings, was in the navy, just before the sanctuary, and it was draped with a white funeral pall, and atop of it was the U.S. flag since Marcel was a veteran. (No-one from the FCGSC knew that Marcel was a veteran, for he never spoke about it.) Since the funeral mass was said during the Easter Season, there were numerous potted lilies in the sanctuary, and the Paschal Candle was lit, and it was placed between the sanctuary and the casket.

The entire funeral mass was said in English, with the exception of the Agnus Dei sung in Latin by the organist just before Communion. The first two readings were Wisdom 3:1-8 and Romans 6:3-4, 8-9 and they were read by Marcel’s son-in-law, James Ashmore. Fr. Roy, who wore the white funerary vestments, read the Gospel, Luke 16:19-31, which is about the Raising of Lazarus. (The Raising of Lazarus was recently referenced in the Gospel for Holy Monday, March 17, in John 12:1-11.) Fr. Roy opened his homily with an acknowledgement Marcel’s service to others, his family, his country, since he served in the U.S. Army in Korea, and that he had a love of his heritage, for he was active in the FSC and the FCGSC. Fr. Roy himself mentioned his own heritage is in French Canada, and he said that he grew up in Chicopee, Mass., near the hometown of Marcel, which was Holyoke. The theological point that Fr. Roy made was that Death was not part of God’s Creation, for it entered Creation with the Sin of Adam and Eve, and he said that a proof that Death is not part of God’s original plan is found in the simple sentence, when Christ heard of the death of Lazarus: “Jesus wept.” Fr. Roy concluded that the raising of Lazarus prefigured the Resurrection of Christ, Who has power over Death, that our own deaths will be overcome through the intercession of Christ, so long as we do His will.

At Communion, Fr. Roy was aided by an Extraordinary Eucharistic Minister, who did not wear an alb, but a plaid purple and white collared shirt and black pants, and to signify his office of EEM in the Archdiocese of Hartford, he wore at the end of a black cord around his neck, a wooden Greek cross with an emblem on it of loaves and fishes made of pewter.

After the funeral mass, the mourners rode in their cars in procession from St. Rose’s Church to the Veteran’s Memorial Field within the Silver Lane Cemetery in East Hartford. The pallbearers took Marcel’s casket, which had the U.S. Flag draped over it, from the hearse, and placed it over the grave. Fr. Roy said the final prayers of the committal ceremony, as a strong wind blew on the overcast day. Then two soldiers began the flag-folding ceremony, as a pre-recorded Taps played in the distance. Once the flag was folded, one soldier gave it to Marcel’s wife, and he thanked her for Marcel’s service to our country. An undertaker from Newkirk and Whitney then said the funeral ceremony for Marcel had ended, and that there would be a reception at the Marco Polo Restaurant in East Hartford. A second undertaker gave out flowers, a statue called Perez’s Sea Lavender, for the mourners either to keep and remember Marcel, or to leave atop of his casket. Due to the wind, the flowers did not stay on the casket.

At the reception, Frances Roy spoke at a podium in the dining hall, and she thanked all who came to Marcel’s funeral, and she said that she was glad to see the people whose names she heard from Marcel, or when they telephoned him. She said that she was glad to see the people who were simply names to her in the past, and that we were able “to break bread together.” (There were about 30 people at the funeral mass, roughly half of whom were members of the FCGSC, and there were about 30 at the reception.) She told us about Marcel’s devotion to the FSC and the FCGSC to the point that if the basement in their home were flooded, and if someone from either club called, he would stop what he was doing in the basement, and go to the club. She remarked that she was awed in the end, for Marcel’s actions caused only more work for himself, for when he returned home, the flooded basement would have more water in it than before he left. (There was mild laughter at her remark.) She also said that Marcel is buried wearing a navy blue sweatshirt made for the 25th anniversary of the FCGSC. She also spoke about Marcel’s suffering with cancer of the kidneys, in a voice that sometimes cracked with held-back emotion. She referenced “phone calls in the middle of the night,” when Marcel would call her from the hospital at all hours. Her audience was silent at her description of Marcel’s suffering.

Frances Roy went from table to table, speaking to Marcel’s friends and relatives. While at the table where I sat, with Susan Paquette, Evelyn Sirois, Pat and Doris Lausier and John Dionne, Frances told us that she and Marcel were members of a French-Canadian club in Hartford in the early 1970s, which has ceased to exist. She could not, nor did anyone else at the table, remember the name of the club, and she said that she was the secretary of the club, although her ancestry is Italian.

In the previous installment in Le Forum, the four deceased founders of the French-Canadian Genealogical Society of Connecticut (FCGSC) were profiled, and in the current installment of the series, three of the five living founders are profiled, who are Paul Hebert, Leon Guimond and Marcel Guerard.

Paul Hebert is listed as the Recording Secretary on the Incorporation Papers of July 17, 1981 for the FCGSC, and on the earliest surviving membership list of September 1981, he is member No. 5 of the society. Both sources list his home address as Enfield, Conn. He has the second shortest record of service to the FCGSC of any of the founders, next to Ethel Hodgdon, for his name does not appear on the list of volunteers for the FCGSC Library in the society newsletter for August 1982, and he did not hold any office after the initial founding of the society. On Sept. 19, 1982, the day of the first election of officers for the FCGSC, which was held at the French Social Circle (FSC) on 981 Park Street, Hartford, Delores Dupuis, (No. 48 of the FCGSC), replaced him as Recording Secretary, as reported in the FCGSC Newsletter for October 1982. In the June 1985 issue of the Connecticut Maple Leaf (CML), his new address is listed as Bear, Delaware.

On June 18, 2006, I interviewed Paul Hebert by telephone, and he said that he moved from Enfield, Conn., to his current residence of Bear, Delaware in 1983, and he remained an paying member of the FCGSC until about 1990 when he realized that the distance from the library was too great, and he would not use it in the near future. (An estimate from Yahoo Maps on the distance from Bear, Delaware to Tolland, Conn., is 262 miles.) He said that he joined the FCGSC because he was interested in his family history, and he knew Henri Carrier when he worked as an engineer at the Merrow Machine Company in Hartford, Conn., a company which moved to Newington, Conn. in the Fall of 1982. (The Merrow Machine Co. is a manufacturer of industrial sewing machines, and since 2004, it is called the Merrow Sewing Machine Co., and it is located in West Wareham, Mass.) He considered Henri to be the genealogical society personified, and to be the biggest force behind the establishment of the FCGSC, for he would often go to Canada to do research. Paul Hebert said that in the early days, one name that was considered for the FCGSC was the “Franco-American Genealogical Society,” but the acronym was not liked, so it was dropped. He remembered that the first meetings were held in the East Hartford Public Library, and that the East Hartford Historical Society was helpful in the formation of the society, and although he could not remember Ethel Hodgdon, who was a member of the historical society.

Paul Hebert said that he has since done most of his genealogy on the Hebert Family through the internet, from a website of a genealogical society based in New Orleans. I told him that I searched his name on the internet, and found that he invented a “Low-cost hermetically-sealed squib,” and he replied that he invented it while he worked for Morton-Thiokol, and that he now works for Boeing. During the conversation, he asked about Henri Carrier, a question that demonstrates that he cut his ties with the society in 1990, for Carrier died on Jan. 31, 1991. At the end of the conversation, he suggested that the FCGSC should develop a website with membership privileges.

Before Leon Guimond became a founding member of the FCGSC, he was member No. 577 of the American Canadian Genealogical Society (ACGS) in Manchester, N.H., (The Genealogist, Feb. 1978), and member No. 160 of the American French Genealogical Society (AFGS) in Woonsocket, R.I., (Je Me Souviens, Sept. 1978). Leon Guimond is listed as a director on the Incorporation Papers of July 17, 1981 for the FCGSC and he held membership No. 6 on the earliest known membership list of September 1981. Both sources list his address as Enfield, Conn. At the first election of the society on Sept. 19, 1982, he was re-elected as a director, as reported in the FCGSC Newsletter for October 1982. He did not finish his term in office, which lasted one year, for in the FCGSC Newsletter for March 1983, there is the report: “LONG DISTANCE He may have moved back to Maine, but Leon Guimond is still with us. Leon #6 is still actively working for the FCGSC, a recent communication from him resulted in our purchase of almost (Continued on page 43)

As the reception slowly ended, Frances Roy encouraged people to take the excess food, which was being packed by the restaurant staff.

The same day, Tues. April 1, 2008, the Directors of the FCGSC had their monthly board meeting, which began at the usual time, at 7PM. Among the reports and the votes, the matter of donations in honor of Marcel Roy to the FCGSC was addressed, and the board voted to purchase books with the moneys donated in Marcel’s memory, to be commemorated with a book plate on the inside front cover of the books.

Marcel Roy was a devoted Roman Catholic, and I remember in the late 1990s, after he returned from a Roy Family Reunion in Quebec, he told me that among the events at the reunion was a Mass, concelebrated by 20 priests, all with the family name of Roy. Only one time can I remember him raising his voice while he was President, and this was out of sheer frustration with some directors who were yelling at him during the board meeting. I cannot remember a time he returned the belittling remarks that were said about him. If one were to summarize his life in a sentence, he lived the Golden Rule, for he treated others as he himself would have liked to have been treated.
all of Maine’s repertoires. Keep up the good work.” There is no report in the quoted newsletter, nor in the newsletters of April and of September 1983, as to who replaced him as director to finish his term of office, so the logical conclusion is that the office remained unfilled. In the first issue of the CML, June 1983, his address is listed as Frenchville, Maine.

Leon Guimond wrote one article for the CML, published in the Winter 1992 issue. The article is really a notice of correction for the Jolin Family in volume six of Recueil de Genealogies des Comtes de Beauce, Dorchester, Frontenac, 1625-1946 by Frere Eloi-Gerard Talbot, mariste. The article is simply entitled “Jolin (Joler),” and the opening sentence is cryptic to anyone unfamiliar with the aforementioned book, as quoted from Guimond: “While doing further research on other families who married Jolins in PQ, it was discovered that the Talbot BDF series had several errors on two particular Jolin families: #22 and #23.” In the same article, Guimond also corrected an error in the Jolin Family Genealogy as published in the Jan. 1990 issue of Le FAROG Forum.

Leon Guimond is listed as a life member of the FCGSC in the Connecticut Maple Leaf: Members’ Pedigree Charts, Special Anniversary Issue, 1981-1991, and in an examination of the sign-in sheets for the FCGSC Library, which date back to April 1984 when the library was in the FSC in Hartford, he first visited the FCGSC Library in Tolland on Mon. Dec. 29, 1986, almost two months after it first opened. (An estimate from Yahoo Maps on the distance from Frenchville, Maine to Tolland, Conn., is 510 miles.) The others at the library that day were Evelyn Durgan of Southington, Conn., Henri Carrier of Tolland, Rolande Clark of East Hartford, Richard Poitras of Tolland, and Marcel, Nancy and Marc Guerard of Hartford. From the records, Guimond seemed to try to visit the library at least once a year, as shown in the following dates: Dec. 23 and 28, 1987; Dec. 28, 1988; Nov. 25, 1989; March 31, 1990; May 5, 1991; Nov. 27, 1992; March 16 and Nov. 29, 1993; May 5, 9, 12, 14 and Dec. 27, 1994; Nov. 27, 1995. He did not sign the logs for 1996, 1997 and 1998. The last time he visited the library was on Dec. 21, 1999. One name that often appears with Guimond’s name on the logs is that of Henri Lanouette, No. 34 of the FCGSC. Both names appear on the logs for Sat. Nov. 25, 1989; Sun. May 5, 1991; Fri. Nov. 27, 1992; Tues. March 16, 1993; Mon. Nov. 29, 1993; Thurs. May 5, 1994; Thurs. May 12, 1994; and Tues. Dec. 27, 1994; and Tues. Dec. 21, 1999. Most of the dates occur either just after Thanksgiving or around Christmas, days when the FCGSC Library is closed to the public, so, one can conclude that Guimond, who was likely in Connecticut visiting his children, would call Henri Lanouette, who lived in Enfield, Conn., and Lanouette would open the library for Guimond, and they would have a pleasant time together working on genealogy. There is no record for Guimond visiting the FCGSC Library from 2000 to 2007 around Thanksgiving or Christmas. (However, Henri Lanouette may have missed his Yuletide visit to the FCGSC Library with Guimond, for on Thurs. Dec. 28, 2000, he visited the library with his nine-year old grand-daughter, Lindsey Steele, and it is the only such visit that he made with his grand-daughter. Henri Lanouette died at his home in Enfield, Conn., on Apr. 27, 2003.)

On June 14, 2006, I interviewed Leon Guimond by telephone, and he said that the reason he left the Board of Directors of the FCGSC is because he moved from Enfield, Conn., to Frenchville, Maine, in order to live in his father’s house, which was built in 1886, on 220 acres of land. (His father, Albert Guimond, died on Oct. 1, 1985 in Fort Kent, Maine, as found in the pedigree chart that Leon Guimond wrote for Connecticut Maple Leaf: Members’ Pedigree Charts, Special Anniversary Issue, 1981-1991.) He said that he has since sold most of the land, but retains 65 acres, where it is “nice and quiet,” and in our conversation, he somewhat boasted that he mows five acres of land regularly. Since it was June 14, he remarked that it was his 74th birthday, and he was proud to have been born on Flag Day, for he said that he flies the flag: “twenty-four seven.” He also boasted that he has five children, three of whom are in Connecticut, one in Phoenix, Arizona, and one in Frenchville, Maine. He also said that he was in Korea for one and a half years, and that he spent 33 years as a concrete finisher.

As for his memories of the beginning of the FCGSC, he said that he remembers going to the ACGS with Henri Carrier and with Henri’s photocopier, and they copied all the books on Kamouraska. He also said that the FCGSC was housed in the clubhouse of the French Social Circle, when it was on Park Street in Hartford, and he remarked that it was open only a couple days a week. He said that he is a life member of the FCGSC, (with membership number 6), and that he was a member of the genealogical societies in Montreal, Quebec, Manchester, Woon-

Don is a Franco-American ace fiddler who has been called the dean of Franco-American fiddling in Maine. Don, who also plays guitar, mandolin and banjo, has been playing since age 6. His uncle Norman Mathieu taught him how to play guitar, and he then accompanied another uncle, Lucien Mathieu, who taught him how to play fiddle at 15.

While growing up in Rockland, he was influenced by fiddlers such as Ben Guillemette, Joe and Gerry Robichaud, and Graham Townsend. The sounds of Quebec, Ireland, Ontario and the Maritime Provinces blend in his style of playing.

Don Roy learns most of his tunes by ear, although he occasionally thumbs through collections of fiddle tunes. In keeping with Acadian tradition, Roy has been passing along his fiddling heritage to a few private students, as well as a larger workshop at the Center for Cultural Exchange, in Portland, Maine.

In 2003, Don and an apprentice won a Traditional Arts Apprenticeship grant from the Maine Arts Commission, receiving two traditional arts fellowships for excellence in traditional music.

Ethnomusicologist Bau Graves calls Roy the finest Franco fiddler in New England, whose playing, “exactly exemplifies what Franco American fiddling is all about. It is simultaneously precisely controlled and wildly danceable.”

With pianist/step dancer Cindy Roy and bassist Jay Young, they perform throughout the Eastern States as the Don Roy Trio. In his spare time, Don custom crafts violins and violas.

mow his lawn.  Leon Guimond ended our telephone conversation of June 14, 2006 with a remark that he had to go.

Leon Guimond did not mention during the telephone conversation that he compiled two books on genealogy, Mariages de Frenchville, Maine (Saint-Luce), 1843-1970 (published in 1987 by Benoit Pontbriand), and Mariages de la Paroisse Ste-Agathe, 1889-1989, St. Agatha, Maine, (published in 1990 by Leon Guimond and D. Raymond). He also did not mention that he has made corrections during his genealogical research, which are published on the internet. The website that I found is entitled Corrections and Additions to [the] Dictionnaire Genealogique de Madawaska that he, Leon Guimond, co-wrote with Robert Chenard of Waterville, Maine in 1994 and revised in 1999. The address of the website is: http://homepages.roadrunner.com/frenchcx/correct2.htm.

On April 11, 2008, I telephoned Leon Guimond again, for an update on the Charette-Charest gathering, and after I quickly learned that he was hard of hearing, unlike my earlier conversation with him, he laconically said that he did not attend the gathering. Immediately after I ended my conversation with him, I telephoned Ray Thomas who told me that the gathering was enjoyable for the 13 people who attended it, and aside from the participants talking about genealogy, they visited the Blockhouse, an historic fort in Fort Kent, Maine at the confluence of the St. John River and the Fish River.

Before Marcel Guerard became a founder of the FCGSC, he was member No. 1234 of the ACGS, (The Genealogist, Aug. 1980), which is one number lower than another founder of the FCGSC, Paul Quintin, who held No. 1235 at the ACGS.

Marcel Guerard is listed as the Vice-President on the Incorporation Papers of July 17, 1981 for the FCGSC, and on the earliest surviving membership list of September 1981, he is member No. 3 of the society. Both sources list his home address as Hartford, Conn. He was elected as Vice-President on Sat. Sept. 19, 1982 in the first election of the FCGSC. On Sun. Sept. 25, 1983, the FCGSC again held its second election at the FSC in Hartford, and Guerard was elected as a Director of the FCGSC, and Henri Lanouette, No. 34 of FCGSC, was elected as Vice-President of the society, as reported in the October 1983 FCGSC Newsletter. The originally scheduled date for the election was May 21, 1983, but the election of officers was simply forgotten at the Spring Membership Meeting. (To quote the newsletter from Sept. 1983: “Election: Due to an oversight at our last meeting, it is necessary for us to have an election for Directors to serve on the Board of Directors for the 1983-1984 membership year.”) On Sun. May 19, 1984, he was elected as a director for a one-year term, as reported in the June 1984 CML. He took office on Sept. 1, but the formal installation of officers was held on Sun. Sept. 23, 1984, as reported in the CML, Dec. 1984. On Sun. Sept. 22, 1985, he was elected for a two-year term as a director, as reported in both the September 1985 FCGSC Newsletter and in the CML, Dec. 1985. On Sat. May 16, 1987, the first time that the elections for officers of the FCGSC were held in the Old Tolland County Courthouse, Marcel Guerard did not run again for office, and he was replaced by Marcel Roy, (No. 241 FCGSC), as a Director.

The reason that he did not run for office is given in the Summer 1987 CML: “… Marcel Guerard… regretfully declined to run for re-election due to time constraints imposed by new employment.” Marcel Guerard wrote twelve articles for the CML. Two are lists of translations, the first is “Understanding Common Terms Found in French Vital Documents,” in the June 1984 CML, and Glossary of Early French-Canadian Occupations,” in the June 1986 CML. He wrote two articles for the Dec. 1985
CML, entitled “Headstone Inscriptions – St. Mary Cemetery, Lisbon,” and “St. Thomas Cemetery, Griswold.” In the paired articles, Guerard culled the French surnames from the list of names found in the two cited cemeteries as found in the Charles Hale Collection of the Connecticut Headstone Inscriptions, which was a WPA Project. The parishes that own the respective cemeteries are Our Lady of the Rosary Church in Jewett City, and St. Thomas’ Church in Voluntown. In the same issue, Guerard wrote a third article, “Memorial to Veterans of Three Wars: North Grosvenordale,” which is a list of veterans of the Civil War, Spanish-American War and World War One from the monument erected on May 30, 1932 on the grounds of St. Joseph Church in North Grosvenordale. In the June 1985 CML, he wrote six articles, four are listings of Franco-American deaths in Bristol, Norwich, Waterbury and Naugatuck for the years 1886 to 1897, another of Franco-American marriages in Waterbury for the years 1887 to 1891, and a listing of officers of L’Institut St. Joseph, L’Union St. Joseph, Societe St-Jean-Baptiste and the Bande St-Jean-Baptiste as found in the Waterbury City Directory 1888. His last article is in the Dec. 1986 CML, entitled, “Suggested Research Sources on ‘The King’s Daughters,’ (Les Filles du Roy).” His article listed three books and two articles. The books are Les Filles du Roi en Nouvelle-France by Silvio Dumas, Filles du Joie ou Filles du Roi by Gustave Lanctot, and The King’s Daughters by Elmer Courteau. The articles are “L’immigration des filles de la Nouvelle-Angletierre au XIXe siècle” par Gerard Malchelosse, M.A.S.G in Les Cahiers des Dix, No. 15, and “Recherche sur les Filles du Roi dans l’etat civil Parisien” by Yves Landry, Memoires de la Societe Genealogiques Canadienne-Francaise, Dec. 1984.

Marcel Guerard also wrote a four-generation pedigree chart of his ancestry, and another of his wife’s ancestry, plus two direct-line ancestry charts that are published in the Connecticut Maple Leaf: Members’ Pedigree Charts, Special Anniversary Issue, 1981-1991. In the same book, he is listed as a life member of the society.

On June 15, 2006, I telephoned Marcel Guerard at his home in the south end of Hartford, and he said that he first met Henri Carrier in the genealogical library of the Latter Day Saints in Manchester, Conn. He remembered that Carrier would often travel to Canada for genealogical books, and that the bulk of the books that were initially used as the first library of the FCGSC in the French Social Circle were loaned by Lorraine Harlow. He said the first library room was effectively a large clothes closet near the club bathroom. He recollected one bad experience about the first library, for one night the club parking lot was full, so he parked his car on the nearby street of Park Terrace, and when he returned to his car later, the rear two wheels were stolen. In contrast, he liked the current location of the library in Tolland, where it was good and clean. He said that he was Vice-President of the society for one term only, at the time of incorporation. (He apparently forgot about his election to the office on Sept. 19, 1982.) He said that he contributed articles to the CML in the early years of its publication, and that he is a life member, and today, he does most of his genealogy on the internet.

To conclude on the Profiles of Three of the Five Founders of the FCGSC, it is curious that the two founders who resided in Enfield, Conn., at the time of incorporation, moved out of the state within two years of the foundation of the society. As such, there are no known photographs in the Archives of the FCGSC of Paul Hebert and Leon Guimond, because the bulk of the photos were taken at the opening of the FCGSC Library in Tolland, in November 1986. Conversely, Marcel Guerard was an officer of the society when the FCGSC Library moved from Hartford to Tolland, so he attended the official opening of the library, and so, there are photographs of him in the Archives of the FCGSC, two of which are included with the article. Of the three founders, it is clear that Leon Guimond is the most fervent in the field of genealogy, and he is the only one to have published two repertoires of marriages. His achievement is a source of pride for him, and when I spoke to him on April 11, 2008, he remarked that the FCGSC has not published a repertoire of marriages, and I replied that some volunteers at the FCGSC have started a necrology based upon the records of a funeral home in Fall River, Mass., but the project stalled a couple years ago. Of course, both of us mentioned that the FCGSC does publish the semi-annual CML and the quarterly newsletter, The Maple Leaflet. All three of the founders use the internet, and it is curious that both Paul Hebert and Marcel Guerard said that they now do most of their research on the internet, it was Leon Guimond who offered his e-mail address for queries, and of the three, he is the only one to have published material that is easily found on the internet.

In the next installment, the remaining two founders of the FCGSC will be profiled, who are Laurette Billig and Lee DeRagon. Also in the next installment, Patrick Lausier and his wife Doris will be profiled since they both hold membership No. 4 in the society, and they replaced Ethel Hodgdon as a Founder of the FCGSC, when the Incorporation Papers of July 17, 1981 is cross-referenced with the earliest FCGSC membership list of September 1981.

Nancy Lamarre
Acadian Accordion Music from Maine

Nancy’s love of Acadian French music and the accordion has reinvigorated her. She loves to entertain her audience, relishes seeing their feet tapping, and takes pride in knowing that she is keeping the tradition alive. Perhaps she is touching lives more than she realizes. Recently while performing at an Alzheimer’s nursing home, she witnessed a wheel-chair bound, unresponsive patient get up and start doing a two-step, much to the shock of the nursing staff. Regardless of the setting, Nancy has always loved to make people smile, always found a way to make others feel better about themselves and to forget their daily worries. Playing the accordion has been a natural extension of her personality allowing her to breathe a little love into the community she has called home for the last four decades.

Franco-Americans are the largest ethnic group in this state, ahead of the Irish, English, Italian, German, Scottish and Latino. The 2000 US census reports that Franco-Americans make up 27% of the total population of New Hampshire. Manchester alone is 35% Franco. No other group comes close to these figures.

Despite our superior numbers, we are an under-celebrated group. We are a proud people, but we’ve always been unassuming and private in our pride. It’s time to cast off this modesty and stand out. We owe it to ourselves to rejoice publicly in our rich culture and varied traditions.

A first step – and an easy way – to (re)connect with our roots is to simply get together and talk about what it means to be Franco-American. I’ve encountered countless young Francos who, when we start talking about one or another aspect of the French identity in New England, exclaim, “I didn’t know that was French!” They go away feeling a deeper pride than ever before, knowing that they carry inside them a great tradition. So let’s come together to share our common background, examine our similar experiences and celebrate who we are.

3.4% of the population of NH speaks French in the home. This might not sound impressive, until we realize that the only other language more commonly spoken in homes in this state is English, and that twice as many people in NH speak French at home than speak Spanish at home (1.6%). Still, I’ve heard Franco-Americans avow time and again, “I don’t speak good French. I speak guttural French.” This is nonsense; this self-abasing attitude originates in outdated linguistic snobbery and has no basis whatsoever in fact. Sadly, Franco-Americans have heard this injurious refrain repeated for so long that we’ve come to believe it, when in fact our French is not only valid, but honorable. It’s the French of the kings of old France, of Rousseau and Molière, of Champlain. Most importantly, it’s the French our people have spoken for centuries, right down to our very own mémères and pépères. We can be proud that our French is genuine and we can laugh at those who try to belittle us and tell us otherwise.

There are many local groups and resources available to Franco-Americans, to help us maintain our heritage and further our culture. For those wishing to deepen their appreciation of our history in the world, the world and the marketing of wares. One of the far-reaching corners of the cultural and linguistic heritage. Let’s work to preserve it and promote for our sake and for the sake of our children and grandchildren. We can all draw from the strength of knowing where we come from, from the pride of realizing we’re part of a long and great tradition. And the Franco-Americans will continue with confidence and faith for generations to come.

Une famille du Nouveau-Brunswick établit un nouveau record mondial

Grand-Sault, Nouveau-Brunswick, Canada - 25 février 2008

Les records sont faits pour être brisés, si l'on en juge au record mondial des treize enfants d'une même famille, établi par une famille LeBlanc de Moncton, Nouveau-Brunswick en 2007. Ce record vient de faire naufrage par les douze enfants d'Eugène Thériault et d'Alice Michaud de Grand-Sault, qui ont récemment reçu le Livre Guinness des Records comme étant la famille ayant le plus d'enfants qui ont atteint l'âge de la maternité.

"N'oublions pas que l'enfance est une étape de notre vie, que chaque enfant qui naît est un potentiel énorme, et que nous devons nous efforcer de l'édifier correctement pour qu'il puisse faire une contribution à la société "

En annonçant ce nouveau record mondial, Yvon, qui était à la tête du processus à la demande de son oncle, Florence Thériault-Corriera (fille d'Albert Thériault) déclare:

Sons and Daughters gather round
Read these stories that we’ve found of Mothers, Fathers, Sisters and Brothers
Aunts and Uncles and many others.
Some names and faces you never knew
Dates and places, we’ve found them too.
Some came on ships from other lands
With hopes and dreams and special plans.

From Ireland, Scotland, Wales and England
France, Germany, China and Finland.
Landing in a strange new land
Native Americans lending a hand.
In bibles, wills, old records we look,
Cemeteries, censuses and all kinds of books.
Digging and searching day after day
Eureka we found it, Hurray, Hurray.
So our legacy to you will be Completed pages of our Family Tree.

Welcome to my "Genealogy Column." Numerous families have since been published. Copies of these may still be available by writing to the Franco-American Center. Listings such as the one below are never complete. However, it does provide you with my most recent and complete file of marriages tied to the original French ancestor. How to use the family listings: The left-hand column lists the first name (and middle name or initial, if any) of the direct descendants of the ancestor identified as number 1 (or A, in some cases). The next column gives the date of marriage, then the spouse (maiden name if female) followed by the town in which the marriage took place. There are two columns of numbers. The one on the left side of the page, e.g., #2, is the child of #1 in the right column of numbers. His parents are thus #1 in the left column of numbers. Also, it should be noted that all the persons in the first column of names under the same number are siblings (brothers & sisters). There may be other siblings, but only those who had descendants that married in Maine are listed in order to keep this listing limited in size. The listing can be used up or down - to find parents or descendants. The best way to see if your ancestors are listed here is to look for your mother’s or grandmother’s maiden name. Once you are sure you have the right couple, take note of the number in the left column under which their names appear. Then, find the same number in the right-most column above. For example, if it’s #57C, simply look for #57C on the right above. Repeat the process for each generation until you get back to the first family in the list. The numbers with alpha suffixes (e.g. 57C) are used mainly for couple who married in Maine. Marriages that took place in Canada normally have no suffixes with the rare exception of small letters, e.g., “13a.” If there are gross errors or missing families, my sincere apologies. I have taken utmost care to be as accurate as possible. Please write to the FORUM staff with your corrections and/or additions with your supporting data. I provide this column freely with the purpose of encouraging Franco-Americans to research their personal genealogy and to take pride in their rich heritage.

GUÉRETTE

Trivia:
Founded by the French and the Indians, Chicago is pronounced with the French pronunciation of the sound ch as opposed to the English ch (China, Chair, etc...)

Detroit was founded by Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac, a French army captain and was originally called Fort Pontchartrain du Détroit, after the minister of marine under Louis XIV and the French word for “strait.”

The limousine, invented as a co-project between Ford and Cadillac, is named for the French province of Limousin, and is associated with the long cloaks once worn by the shepherds there[1]

The Louisiana Territory, sold to the United States in 1803, comprised 15 of today’s modern states (from North to South: Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and parts of Texas and New Mexico).

Little Canada, Minnesota located between Minneapolis and Saint Paul, Minnesota has the largest French-American (or Canado-Américaine) community outside the Northeast.

The first daylight march of the KKK occurred in Milo Maine.

THE FRANCO-AMERICAN CENTRE
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF MAINE

The University of Maine Office of Franco American Affairs was founded in 1972 by Franco American students and community volunteers. It subsequently became the Franco American Centre.

From the onset, its purpose has been to introduce and integrate the Maine and Regional Franco American Fact in post-secondary academe and in particular the University of Maine.

Given the quasi total absence of a base of knowledge within the University about this nearly one-half of the population of the State of Maine, this effort has sought to develop ways and means of making this population, its identity, its contributions and its history visible on and off campus through seminars, workshops, conferences and media efforts — print and electronic.

The results sought have been the redressing of historical neglect and ignorance by returning to Franco Americans their history, their language and access to full and healthy self realizations. Further, changes within the University’s working, in its structure and curriculum are sought in order that those who follow may experience cultural equity, have access to a culturally authentic base of knowledge dealing with French American identity and the contribution of this ethnic group to this society.

MISSION

• To be an advocate of the Franco-American Fact at the University of Maine, in the State of Maine and in the region, and

• To provide vehicles for the effective and cognitive expression of a collective, authentic, diversified and effective voice for Franco-Americans, and

• To stimulate the development of academic and non-academic program offerings at the University of Maine and in the state relevant to the history and life experience of this ethnic group and

• To assist and support Franco-Americans in the actualization of their language and culture in the advancement of careers, personal growth and their creative contribution to society, and

• To assist and provide support in the creation and implementation of a concept of pluralism which values, validates and reflects affectively and cognitively the Multicultural Fact in Maine and elsewhere in North America, and

• To assist in the generation and dissemination of knowledge about a major Maine resource — the rich cultural and language diversity of its people.

THE FRANCO-AMERICAN CENTRE
OF THE

Dès le départ, son but fut d’introduire et d’intégrer le Fait Franco-Américain du Maine et de la Région dans la formation académique post-secondaire et en particulier à l’Université du Maine.

Étant donné l’absence presque totale d’une base de connaissances à l’intérieur même de l’Université, le Centre Franco-Américain s’efforce d’essayer de développer des moyens pour rendre cette population, son identité, ses contributions et son histoire visible sur et en-dehors du campus à travers des séminaires, des ateliers, des conférences et des efforts médiatiques — imprimé et électronique.

Le résultat espéré est le redressement de la négligence et de l’ignorance historique en retournant aux Franco-Américains leur histoire, leur langue et l’accès à un accomplissement personnel sain et complet. De plus, des changements à l’intérieur de l’académie, dans sa structure et son curriculum sont nécessaires afin que ceux qui nous suivent puisse vivre l’expérience d’une justice culturelle, avoir accès à une base de connaissances culturellement authentique qui miroite l’identité et la contribution de ce groupe ethnique à la société.

OBJECTIFS:

2 – D’offrir des véhicules d’expression affective et cognitive d’une voix franco-américaine effective, collective, authentique et diversifiée.

3 – De stimuler le développement des offres de programmes académiques et non-académiques à l’Université du Maine et dans l’État du Maine, relatant l’histoire et l’expérience de la vie de ce groupe ethnique.

4 – D’assister et de supporter les Franco-Américains dans l’actualisation de leur langue et de leur culture dans l’avancement de leurs carrières, de l’accomplissement de leur personne et de leur contribution créative à la société.

5 – D’assister et d’offrir du support dans la création et l’implémentation d’un concept de pluralisme qui value, valide et reflète effectivement et cognitivement le fait dans le Maine et leurs en Amérique du Nord.

6 – D’assister dans la création et la publication de la connaissance à propos d’une ressource importante du Maine — la riche diversité.
