Maine Adapted Physical Education Task Force Presents

Physical Education and Autism: Ideas That Work

This workshop will focus on adaptations and modifications to facilitate successful inclusion of children with autism in physical education and sport environments.

When:
March 16, 2018, 9 a.m.–3:00 p.m.; registration 8:30 a.m. Alternate date for inclement weather: March 21

Where:
Buchanan Alumni House, University of Maine, Orono

For:
Physical Educators, Paraprofessionals, Occupational Therapists, & Physical Therapists

Includes:
Lunch, breaks with refreshments, 6 contact hours (certificate)

Cost:
$75; If 2 or more from the same school district, $50 each

Presenters:
Courtney Angelosante is a Ph.D. candidate in the Prevention and Intervention Studies program and serves as a lecturer in the College of Education and Human Development at the University of Maine. She is a Board Certified Behavior Analyst and provides behavioral consultation to schools throughout Maine in positive behavioral interventions and autism spectrum disorders.

Dr. Jim Artesani is the Associate Dean of Graduate Studies, Research, and Outreach in the College of Education and Human Development at the University of Maine. He coordinates the Ph.D. program in Prevention and Intervention Studies and has served as a behavioral consultant to many Maine schools.

Physical Education and Autism: Ideas That Work
To register return payment and this completed form to:
Conferences & Institutes, 5713 Chadbourne Hall, Orono, ME 04469

School Name__________________________________________
Name of Participant___________________________________
Address______________________________________________
City State Zip________________________________________

Email_________________________________________________
Phone Number________________________________________
Dietary Restrictions____________________________________

Maine Adapted Physical Education Task Force Presents

Physical Education and Autism: Ideas That Work

This workshop will focus on adaptations and modifications to facilitate successful inclusion of children with autism in physical education and sport environments.

When:
March 16, 2018, 9 a.m.–3:00 p.m.; registration 8:30 a.m. Alternate date for inclement weather: March 21

Where:
Buchanan Alumni House, University of Maine, Orono

For:
Physical Educators, Paraprofessionals, Occupational Therapists, & Physical Therapists

Includes:
Lunch, breaks with refreshments, 6 contact hours (certificate)

Cost:
$75; If 2 or more from the same school district, $50 each

Presenters:
Courtney Angelosante is a Ph.D. candidate in the Prevention and Intervention Studies program and serves as a lecturer in the College of Education and Human Development at the University of Maine. She is a Board Certified Behavior Analyst and provides behavioral consultation to schools throughout Maine in positive behavioral interventions and autism spectrum disorders.

Dr. Jim Artesani is the Associate Dean of Graduate Studies, Research, and Outreach in the College of Education and Human Development at the University of Maine. He coordinates the Ph.D. program in Prevention and Intervention Studies and has served as a behavioral consultant to many Maine schools.

Physical Education and Autism: Ideas That Work
To register return payment and this completed form to:
Conferences & Institutes, 5713 Chadbourne Hall, Orono, ME 04469

School Name__________________________________________
Name of Participant___________________________________
Address______________________________________________
City State Zip________________________________________

Email_________________________________________________
Phone Number________________________________________
Dietary Restrictions____________________________________