

Overview

The Katahdin Region* has experienced significant socioeconomic change over the past few years and citizens are actively exploring opportunities to make the region a more resilient and robust place to live, work, and play. Collating and comparing socioeconomic indicators is a well-regarded approach to both developing a 'snapshot' of the current state of a community, but also assessing whether an area is making positive strides in terms of social and economic development. This handout presents several socioeconomic indicators for the greater Katahdin Region, and compares many of them over time as well as to Penobscot and Aroostook Counties, Maine and the United States. These indicators can help provide insight on where the area may be succeeding as well as opportunities for improvement.

Regional Comparison of Key Indicators

The Katahdin Region has faced significant socio-economic changes in recent years and lags the two counties it is located in, the state, and the country in many key indicators. Between 2000 and 2017, the region has experienced a 12.2% decline in population, and with a median age of 52.6 years, Katahdin's residents are older than the other areas of comparison. In 2017, the region's unemployment rate was approximately 8%, and only 47% of the residents aged 16 and older were participating in the labor force. However, the Katahdin Region's estimated poverty rates are relatively low, which can be partially attributed to low housing values compared to household income and a high proportion of retirees in the area who may be living of social security and other savings. A detailed list of indicators for each municipality in the region is presented on the back page.
