Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies
Requirements for the Major

Overview

Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies is an interdisciplinary program staffed by two joint appointment faculty members and other full time and part time faculty with related expertise. Our alumni are employed in social service work, health services occupations, business, law, education, and government at all levels. They find employment in public policy fields, working with women specifically or with people in general. In the private sector, graduates are successful in management positions, especially in those involving work with diverse groups of people. Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies is also an excellent second major or minor for students in a wide variety of disciplines, such as anthropology, nursing, political science, sociology, English, social work, and history.

Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies students gain a more complete understanding of how the social construction of gender has influenced the roles, contributions, and experiences of both women and men in many different cultures, now and in the past. Such awareness can help them better understand our contemporary world with its changing roles for all. They will learn to appreciate the complexity of how gender interacts with race, social class, sexual orientation, and other forms of diversity. They will recognize the connection between Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies and other disciplines. Students will develop an appreciation for how scholarship in our field informs activism and social change, historically and in the present. They will develop the critical intellectual capacity and communication skills to work with, to value and improve the lives of others in whatever public or private spheres they choose.
